Mine Owners Dodge on Pact Breaking

PROBE COUNTY TREASURY

PGH. COAL, ROCKEFELLER AND SCHWAB EVADE QUIZ

Sun-Tele Submits Chance to Both to State Reasons for Scrapping Union Pact.

Both Decline Any Comment; Plan Would Have Impartial Tribunal Decide Matter

By JOHN P. COWAN,
Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, March 31.—Charles M. Schwab and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., exponents of the strategy of broken contracts in the bituminous coal war, have taken to bombproof shelters.

Warned by the onslaught from Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of the Senate investigating committee, of greater fury yet to come through an aroused public opinion, these big business figures today are seeking refuge from the pain of explaining further the paradox of successful industry founded on shattered agreements and broken pledges.

In their testimony before the Senate committee last week, both sought immunity, Schwab by evasion and Rockefeller by declaring that he had been told by his subordinates that the contract with the United Mine Workers had not been broken. The Schwab company is the Bethlehem Mines Corporation and the Rockefeller concern is the Consolidation Coal Company.

QUESTIONS SUBMITTED

For the enlightenment of the public and to give Schwab and Rockefeller an opportunity to establish the record of fact as to their own points of view, The Sun-Telegraph submitted the questions carried with this article.

Rockefeller "is never interviewed by the press." His spokesman is Ivy Lee, press agent. The questions were referred to Mr. Lee's office for 24-hour consideration and the answer came: "Mr. Rockefeller has nothing to add to the facts developed in his testimony before the Senate committee."

Every possible effort was made to obtain statements from Schwab and Rockefeller personally.

The barrier of employes at 25 Broadway, made it impossible to reach Mr. Schwab himself, but a spokesman for him declared that to "answer those questions would be unfair to the Senate—very unfair."

PUT UP TO LESHER

Questions substantially the same as those propounded to Rockefeller were submitted yesterday to Carl E. Lesher, executive vice president of the Pittsburgh Coal Company.

"Our answers," he said, "will be found in the record of the Senate investigation at Washington, and in the advertisements we published in the Pittsburgh newspapers."

The questions were also put to Don Rose, attorney for the Pittsburgh Coal Company. He declined to answer them.

Questions Dodged By Rockefeller, Schwab

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and Charles M. Schwab, whose companies broke agreements with the United Mine Workers, dodged answering these questions, put to them by the Sun-Telegraph:

1—Representatives of your company and the representatives of the United Mine Workers signed the Baltimore agreement for a period of thee years, from April 1, 1924, to March 31, 1927. Was your company not morally and legally bound, if it operated its mines during that period, to operate according to the terms of agreement?

2—Could the contract be modified, changed or canceled, except by representatives of the same parties who made it; your company on the one hand and the United Mine Workers' organization on the other?

3—If so, will you waive all legal technicalities and submit the one question of fact, whether the contract was or was not abrogated by your company, to an impartial tribunal to be chosen by disinterested parties?

4—Should such tribunal decide your company abrogated the agreement, will you pay the United Mine Workers damages sustained by such abrogation, the amount to be determined by disinterested parties?

5—Do you agree with the statements in President Coolidge's letter to John L. Lewis that the agreement could only be changed, modified, canceled or annulled by mutual consent of parties who made it?

6—Assuming you had to reduce wages below the scale established in the contract, in order to avoid loss and provide work for your miners, did your action not constitute a violation of contract? Was it not morally reprehensible, however justifiable from the standpoint of expediency? Does a good end justify immoral means to effect it?

AUDIT QUIZ CENTERS ON FOSTER RULE

Development in Inquiry Revealed When Taxpayers Are Questioned.

Letter Sent Out to Hundreds Creates Furore Among Courthouse Employes.

Accountants retained by Controller Robert G. Woodside to investigate the books and records of Allegheny county have centered their attention upon the office of the County Treasurer.

They are conducting an intensive investigation of the conduct of that office during the year 1927, when the office was headed by Col. Samuel D. Foster, now recorder of deeds.

Evidence of the scope of the investigation appeared yesterday when hundreds of county taxpayers received the following letter:

"In connection with the independent audit of the records of Allegheny county now being made, you are requested to advise the auditors, Messrs. Ernst and Ernst, the date on which you paid your county tax for 1927, together with the amount paid.

WOULD AID AUDIT

"A prompt reply in the spaces provided below would facilitate the audit materially and be much appreciated. A stamped envelope is enclosed for your convenience in replying.

"Very truly yours,
"ROBERT G. WOODSIDE,
"Controller."

"Please show location of your property.

"May taxes were paid by check ..... cash ..... on .....

"The amount paid was ....."

The appearance of this letter created a furore in the Court House, where the audit seemed to have been forgotten except by those employes who have talked to the dozen or more tight-lipped gentlemen prowling around in a search for records designed to aid them in the investigation.

Though Woodside and his confidential employes maintain a discreet silence, the rumor persists that the report of the accountants due sometime in May, will develop into one of the biggest "political" stories in the history of the county. A complete change in the county's bookkeeping system is expected to result from the probe.

THELMA FILES DIVORCE SUIT

GREENSBURG, Pa., March 31.—Thelma Williams Gray, the Miss Pittsburgh of 1926, filed suit for divorce from Jesse Gray in Westmoreland county today.

The Pittsburgh beauty, who just a few years ago was a school teacher in rural Center county, charges cruel and barbarous treatment, and indignities. Her counsel, Attorney P. K. Shaner, said the bill of particulars contained strong statements.

Miss Pittsburgh married Gray soon after winning the beauty title. She said they had separated in 1927 and that she is now living in Trafford.

LAUNCH PROBE OF P.R.R. WRECK

Railroad and Federal authorities on Saturday began an investigation of the wreck of the Broadway Limited and Liberty Limited, near Lima, O., on Friday night, in which 67 persons were injured. All of the injured except five were able to leave the hospital after having their injuries dressed.

Running 60 miles an hour the Liberty crashed into the Broadway, which had stopped to permit a work train to proceed to repair storm damage. A parlor car, a club car and a mail car were telescoped, and several cars were derailed.

Included in the list of victims were: M. Bower, 74, Church avenue, Ben Avon, and Mrs. P. J. Brummel, 572 Celeron street. Forty-eight of those injured were passengers, the other 19 being railroad employes.

The engineer of the Liberty, Henry Strasser, of Fort Wayne, Ind., most seriously injured, was evidently ignorant that the Broadway had orders to stop. He was running a half-hour behind the Broadway and when four miles from Lima his train crashed into the rear of the waiting train.

Most of the victims were able to continue on their way after having their injuries dressed in a Lima hospital.

Willis' Friends Scoff at Theory He Was Poisoned

Associated Press.

DELAWARE, O., March 31.

FRIENDS of Senator Willis here placed little or no credence in the suggestion by Senator Thomas Heflin of Alabama, that Senator Willis may have been poisoned.

Charles A. Jones, the senator's private secretary, said no action would be taken to have a chemical analysis made of the senator's vital organs to ascertain whether they contained poison.

Jones said that Mrs. Willis had not yet been shown the Heflin telegram.

"We are satisfied that the senator's death was due to cerebral hemorrhage as the physician announced and you can quote me definitely as saying that there will be no analysis made. The body has been embalmed for burial and I can see no reason for making such analysis."

TEN BOARDS TO FACE CHARGES

been held over for further consideration, First Assistant District Attorney Andrew T. Park, in charge of election prosecutions, stated Saturday in announcing that additional prosecutions had been agreed upon.

TO DROP SOME CASES

Mr. Park said:

"Representatives of both the bar and election organizations participated in conferences with us to determine what cases merited prosecution. Charges against about eight other election boards have been held over for further consideration. In the other cases brought to our attention, no charges will be brought.

"In these cases which will be dropped, only slight discrepancies or clerical errors were shown to have existed. Prosecutions have been ordered only where clear evidence of gross negligence or fraud has been shown."

Park stated that no announcement of the boards involved would be made until the ballot boxes of these districts, now in the custody of the sheriff, have been impounded and informations have been ordered filed. It is expected that informations will be made this week.

UP IN FALL

There is no likelihood that these boards will be brought to trial before next fall or winter. The charges will not be submitted to the April grand jury, which convenes Monday, and two months may elapse before grand jury action will be taken.

Election cases to be placed on the trial list the latter part of April are under preparation by the district attorney's office. Under the agreement with Attorney Rody P. Marshall, sole counsel engaged by Republican leaders for nearly 200 defendants awaiting trial, the continuous trial of election cases will be started April 16. Assisting Park in the trial of the cases will be Assistant District Attorneys Roy T. Cluns, George F. P. Langfitt and John F. Haggerty.

Poison Killed Willis, Sen. Heflin Intimates might have feared poisoning. It looks mighty peculiar to me.

"I believe the finest tribute Ohio could pay to her distinguished son would be to elect the delegation, pledged to him, as uninstructed. He stood for law enforcement and the constitution. Ohio should uphold his hands in death."

SIMPLE FUNERAL

DELAWARE, O., March 31.—(AP.)—The town that acclaimed Senator Frank B. Willis as its favorite son candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, was in mourning tonight, hardly recovered from the shock of his death a few minutes before he was to deliver a campaign speech.

Plans to have his body lie in state in Gray chapel of Ohio Wesleyan University, where death suddenly eliminated him from the contest with Herbert Hoover for the Ohio delegation to the Republican national convention, were completed today.

Funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon in Gray chapel, with Senator Simon D. Fess and former Congressman Ralph D. Cole scheduled to deliver funeral orations. Dr. Otto Scott Brown, pastor of the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, which Senator Willis attended here, will preside at the services, which Mrs. Willis has requested to be simple and unpretentious.

Senator Willis' body will be taken to Gray chapel Monday noon to lie in state from 2 o'clock to 9 o'clock Monday, and from 9 o'clock Tuesday morning until the time of the funeral. Friends may visit his bier in the Willis home on Franklin street from 2 o'clock to 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Following the services in Gray chapel Tuesday afternoon Senator Willis' body will be carried to the Oak Grove Cemetery here, where he will be buried near his father and mother.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Both the Senate and House adjourned today in respect to the memory of Senator Frank B. Willis, (R.), of Ohio, who died unexpectedly at Delaware, O., last night.

NILES, Mich., March 31.—(INS.)—Miss Margaret Bumbaugh, 32, of Warsaw, Ind., admitted today that she shot and killed W. H. Cook, owner of a basket company here, in a quarrel over a debt according to authorities.

Thomas J. Harrison, factory superintedent, was wounded in the left leg. Miss Bumbaugh is charged with murder.

Her brother Harry is held for investigation. Police say they found a revolver in his possession.

The money which Cook is said to have borrowed from the Bumbaugh's totals more than $3,300.

Yesterday Miss Bumbaugh came to Niles. Her brothers, Harry and Hudd accompanied her.

ASK RETRIAL IN DAMAGE AWARD

Attorneys Dalzell, Fisher & Dalzell on Saturday filed a motion for a new trial in the case of James Gibbons against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in which Gibbons was awarded $33,232 for a crushed right leg. Gibbons is compelled to walk on crutches, and his counsel, Rody P. Marshall, says Gibbons is crippled for life. This was the second trial, Gibbons having been awarded $24,000 at the first trial. Gibbons was hurt by a freight train in an accident near Tenth street, several years ago.

A motion for a new trial also has been made in the case of Esther Levitt, Webster avenue, awarded $12,000 against the B. & G. Sandwich Shop, Fifth avenue, for injuries received to her spine when she slipped and fell on the restaurant floor. Rody P. Marshall is Miss Levitt's counsel.

The investigation was launched after a girl complained to federal authorities that she had been fed doped candy after answering an advertisement for magazine solicitors.

MYSTERY DIMS PRINCE'S DEATH

CANNES, France, March 31.—(AP.)—Mystery today cloaked the suicide of Prince George Christian Lobkowicz, 25, scion of one of the most illustrious of the semi-royal families of old Austria. He threw himself in front of a train and no motive could be learned for the act.

The suicide created a sensation at this resort because of the high social standing of his family, who reside in Prague. The prince was a cousin of Prince Edward Lobkowicz, of New York and Chicago, who married Anita H. Lihme, of Chicago, at Watch Hill, R. I., in 1925.

REED DERIDES HOOVER FOR PRICE CURB

Missourian Fires Broadside in Wisconsin Campaign Speech.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., March 31.—(AP.)—Invading Wisconsin on the eve of the state's Democratic presidential primary, Senator Reed of Missouri, in a speech here tonight blamed the Republican party for the post-war plight of American farmers. He centered his attack particularly on Herbert Hoover, contending that as food administrator during the war, he had held down the price paid farmers for their wheat.

"Congress never gave to Herbert Hoover or any other man the right to limit the price to which wheat might go above $2.20," said the Missouri presidential candidate. "But Congress did unfortunately give to that distinguished ex-patriate the power to license all dealers in grain and all millers. Without that license, they could not do business. Hoover possessed the power of life and death over these dealers and millers.

"He notified every grain dealer in the United States that if they paid more than $2.20 per bushel, his license to transact business would be revoked and his business thereby destroyed. He notified every miller that he must buy from the grain dealers and at the stipulated minimum price, plus a small differential of profit.

"The Export Grain Corporation was formed, and no wheat could be shipped abroad save through it, and that corporation, dominated by Mr. Hoover and in obedience to his demands, fixed the same price for export grain as he had fixed in the domestic market. The result was that no farmer had any place he could sell wheat, except at the price arbitrarily fixed by Mr. Hoover.

"Now come the spokesmen for Mr. Hoover and charge that it was the Wilson administration that fixed the price of grain. The Wilson administration did nothing of the kind. It guaranteed the minimum price."

Senator Reed, along with Gov Smith of New York and Senator Walsh of Montana, is entered in the Democratic primaries, which will be held Tuesday. Reed is seeking the state's preference vote Slates of delagates committed to Smith and Walsh are in the field.

The only one of the three to come into the state for speeches before the primary, the Missourian opened his invasion here tonight.

Tomorrow he had planned to address University of Wisconsin students at Madison, but canceled the engagement to spend the day resting here. On Monday he is scheduled to speak in Fond Du Lac and Green Bay.

'Ancient' Toad's Age Shrinks 748,000 Yrs.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—(AP.)—The live toad found recently near Frederick, Okla., in the same clay strata which has yielded relics of the poelstocene or glacial age of approximately 300,000 years ago, arrived at the National Museum today and after undergoing the careful scrutiny of reptile experts and biologists was pronounced a perfect specimen or a 2-year-old Western toad.

Dr. Oliver P. May, vertebrate paleontologist of the Carnegie Institute, and Dr. Lionel Stejneger, head curator of biology and chief of the reptile division of the Smithsonian Institution, bestowed the name bufo compactilis on the toad and announced it would be shipped back to its native heath, the gravel pit of the Red River.

The scientists explained that bufo had in some way slipped through a fissure in the ridge and become lodged in the red clay strata. Toads have been known to live for 16 months in this way, directly cut off from food and water, they said, but they were unable to explain how the toad managed to rap itself up in its clay ball. Other instances of this are not unknown, however, Dr. Hay said, but he declared that the toad was certainly not existent more than two years ago.

Experts at Denver, Col., had declared the toad's earthen chamber appeared to belong to an age that would make it three-quarters of a million years old.

THREE NABBED IN DRY RAIDS

A whisky cutting plant at 2524 Center avenue, and a plant in the rear of 7318 Tioga street for reclaiming whisky from soaked whisky barrels were raided Saturday. The raids were by prohibition agents and constables, operating under Joseph A. Frayne, assistant prohibition administrator.

The latter plant was equipped with two electric "sweaters" for extracting whisky from barrels and chips from old whisky barrels. Among the alleged contraband seized were two 52-gallon barrels of chips. The raiders also seized 125 gallons of whisky, five gallons of alcohol, and a large assortment of fake whisky labels. Dominick Muchelly was arrested in connection with the raid.

In the Center avenue raid 65 gallons of alcohol and 10 barrels of whisky chips were seized. Nathan Gehrman, 38; Samuel Katz, 37, and George Williams, 28, a Negro, were arrested.

LEVINE, 'QUEEN' MAY HOP OCEAN

PARIS, March 31.—(AP.)—Isaac Levine, a relative of Charles A. Levine, trans-Atlantic air passenger, announced here today that Charles Levine would pilot Mabel Boll, known as "The Queen of Diamonds," across the Atlantic Ocean to Paris in a plane on or before May 15.

He said Miss Boll would have liked to handle the plane herself and had been taking lessons from Levine, but that it was probable that Levine, who was eager to show his capabilities as a pilot, would steer the machine at least most of the time.

Miss Boll announced in New York recently that Wilmer Stultz, who piloted her and Levine to Havana, would be her pilot on a trans-Atlantic flight. She said she was trying to buy a plane and would make the flight late in May.

Two Armed Bandits Rob Grocery Store

Two armed bandits bound C. E. Reidenbaugh, manager of the Eagle Grocery, 1121 Pennsylvania avenue forced him to lie on the floor behind a counter and compelled Miss Helen Harriett, clerk, to open the cash register, Saturday. They took $40 and escaped. Detectives Edward McIntee and Clarence Rader searched the neighborhood for trace of the bandits.

TWO CONFESS IN MYSTERY DEATH

CHESTER, Pa., March 31.—(INS.)—Exactly a week after the body of Norman Gibson, 21, was found slain near the home of his sweetheart in Aston Mills, Delaware county, the alleged killers of the youth confessed.

The alleged confessions completely exonerate Gibson's fiancee, Dora Killen, 17, and her father, William H. Killen, first questioned by the police.

The confessions were obtained after nearly 10 hours of grilling by District Attorney William J. McCarter and detectives of Delaware county.

The accused men are Jesse Parker, 21, of Media, and William Phillips, 34, of Chester. They are being held in the Media jail and formally will be charged with Gibson's murder.

Parker was arrested when it was learned he was preparing to leave home. He was questioned for a long while before he started to weaken. Accidentally he mentioned the name of his accomplice, Phillips, who was immediately arrested and quizzed separately. Their stories disagreed and looked suspicious. When the men were brought together they broke down and made a complete confession of the crime, according to the police.

Parker and Phillips said they were driving along the highway when they saw Gibson and decided to hold him up. Gibson tried to fight them off and in the struggle Parker shot the youth, police say.

Strike-Torn Ohio Coal Fields Opening Up Nonuni

[B]OTH SIDES IN [M]INE WAR ARE STANDING PAT

Evictions in Eastern Part of State Probably Will Be Postponed, Is Indication.

BELLAIRE, O., March 31.—The first anniversary of the coal strike in Eastern Ohio tomorrow will find great changes in conditions which existed a year ago. At that time every mine in the field, which dominates the state's coal industry, was idle. Now approximately a dozen mines, employing about 2,000 men, are operating on an open-shop or co-operative basis.

Some of the workings are being operated by local men, but in most cases the workers have been imported from Pittsburgh and Cleveland.

NEW FACES

The type of population in many of the mining communities is changing where nonunion men are employed. Negroes are replacing the foreigners and native-born whites. Police departments in the vicinity of such mines are kept busy on pay days as a result of liquor parties.

The suspension has paralyzed business. More failures and foreclosures than ever before have been recorded. No relief is in sight, and business men are not hopeful of any lasting benefit from operation of mines on the present basis, as much of the money is sent to other states.

BOTH STAND PAT

Neither the operators nor the union has given ground. Rather, the operators have gone one step farther by starting the plants nonunion. They were aided by a Federal injunction, novel by its wide spread coverage of possible interference. Under its provisions, hundreds of union families are scheduled to be evicted from company homes tomorrow, but it is believed this will be postponed. However, the union is erecting barracks in several places.

The union still demands the $7.50 basic wage provided for in the Jacksonville agreement. The operators are paying $5 a day in their open-shop mines.

No serious difficulties have arisen, although frequent minor outbreaks have occurred in mine settlements. Scores of requests for National Guard protection have been sent to Columbus.

The Guard is in the field—but on an entirely different mission. It is aiding in the distribution of clothing to striking union families, and is operating kitchens at which children receive at least one meal a day.

Other organizations also are aiding in relief work. A Pittsburgh organization and the union itself have done much to aid the destitute families.

Causes Family Rift?

INFLUENCE—Roszika Dolly, who married Mortimer Davis, Jr., son of the late Canadian distiller, against his father's will, is the cause of a rift now between her husband and his mother, Lady Eleanor Davis, who has left Paris alone to accompany Sir Davis' body to Montreal for the funeral. A codicil in Sir Davis' will considerably reduces Mortimer's share in the reputed $100,000,000 fortune and a bitter legal battle over the division of the estate is foreseen as the result of yesterday's open family break in Paris. Roszika charges Lady Eleanor with exerting undue influence over Sir Davis.

Roszika Dolly Denies Rift With In-Laws

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN,
Universal Service Special Cable.

PARIS, March 31.—Prospects for a bitter legal contest over the reputed $100,000,000 estate of the late Sir Mortimer Davis loomed today when Mortimer Davis, Jr., and his wife, formerly Roszika Dolly, at the last moment dramatically canceled their passages aboard the S. S. Mauretania.

This left the widow of the Canadian financier, Lady Eleanor, to accompany the body alone to Montreal for the burial.

Baron Maurice de Rothschild accompanied the beautiful widow in her private car as far as Cherbourg.

WILL IS CHANGED

The smouldering ill-feeling between the son and the widow of Sir Mortimer, broke out into open resentment when it was discovered last night that a codicil to the will greatly reduces his share in the huge fortune because he married Roszika against his father's wishes.

Roszika blamed this on Lady Eleanor, formerly Eleanor Curran, of New Orleans, whom she charged with exerting undue influence. This precipitated a stormy scene and threats of legal action in the Davis apartment at the Hotel Astoria.

The father of the Dolly sisters and their brother, Edward, joined sides with Roszika and her husband in the argument. In the midst of the discussion, Lady Eleanor stalked out after ordering all her luggage prepared and shipped to another hotel for the night.

When the boat train left the St. Lazare station this morning, none of the Dollys nor Mortimer Davis was present. Eleven of the smartest men about town in Parisian society, top-hatted and frock-coated, with wide mourning bands on their sleeves, were on hand to bid Lady Eleanor "au revoir." Baron de Rothschild alone accompanied her to Cherbourg.

WIDOW IS SILENT

The widow of the Canadian distiller declined to comment on the reported rift in the family. Mortimer Davis also refused to be interviewed, but his wife, Roszika, declared to Universal Service:

"We didn't sail today simply because we couldn't get accommodations. But we are returning to the United States.

"Reservations have been made for us on the Leviathan, sailing Tuesday. So we will be in Montreal in time for the funeral, anyway.

"As I told you before, I've always understood that Sir Mortimer divided his fortune between Morty and his widow. Any change in the will is news to me.

"I am sure that nobody knows definitely until the will is probated after the funeral. Quarrel with Lady Eleanor? She is very temperamental and likes to do things her own way, but there has been no quarrel."

Hatchman, pastor of Beth Eden Baptist Church.

With the Easter holidays coming shortly after the opening of the campaign a great deal more time will be afforded the children of the schools who are lending every effort to make the 1928 drive surpass the record one of 1927.

MR. HEARST FOR RELIEF

According to Representative Porter, Mr. Hearst, while urging the necessity for some international agreement for the limitation of drug manufacture to medicinal needs, suggested also that it would be a splendid thing if in the meantime some measure could be adopted in the United States which would tend to relieve the evil already done here.

It was this suggestion, Representative Porter states, which caused him to consider the problem and hit upon the idea of proposing the creation of two great federal narcotic farms where drug addicts, convicted under the Harrison narcotic act, might be given separate treatment and cured before being released to renew the habit again.

Not only would the two great farms house federal offenders, but provision is made in the bill for the various states to take advantage of the facilities and send their own prisoners there for treatment, with the states charged a nominal sum for the service. In this way Representative Porter hopes to have the federal government lead the way in a movement that ultimately will be taken up by the states individually.

It is the contention of the Pennsylvania member, based on the opinion of government specialists and eminent physicians, that drug addiction is a disease more than anything else, and one that is subject to treatment and cure under proper conditions. He therefore proposes that all patients sent to the federal farms be required to remain there until their condition and craving for drugs is overcome.

CALLED "DISEASE"

"Often," he said, "addicts are victims of misfortune over which they have no control. The public have in some cases misconstrued addiction as being merely a vice which a man with a sufficient amount of moral fiber and mental stamina could overcome. It is rather a disease against whose ravages the addict is helpless unless he can be given careful and scientific treatment in a specialized institution for a considerable period of time extending in some cases over a period of two, three or even four years."

After pointing out that at the present time there are more than 2,000 narcotic inmates of our federal prisons with facilities crowded and no ample provision made for their separate treatment, Representative Porter continued:

"The establishment of narcotic farms, would, in my opinion, not only go a long way toward relieving the congestion in federal prisons but would also operate to reduce crime, since nearly 50 per cent of the men who leave prison return again to their former activities. How is it possible for an addict to go straight if he is turned out of prison with a gnawing appetite for a drug which costs him from $6 to $8 a day and with no money to buy it?

"We ought to get to the seat of the infection and remove the cause for crime. The addict who has no money to buy or can not secure his drug is a menace to society."

CHEAPER SYSTEM

In the long run Mr. Porter believes it would be much cheaper to build institutions of the kind than to rely on our present prison system. First, he says, they could be constructed at less expense than could a penitentiary housing the same number of inmates. But the real economy factor, as he sees it, to say nothing of the humanitarian element, is to be found in the cure that would result, with addicts turned out each year able to live normally. The federal government would, as a consequence, save tremendous amounts in the cost of apprehending and convicting addicts, since many authorities have made the statement that it costs $2,000 to apprend and convict an offender.

"I believe," Mr. Porter said in conclusion, "that in view of the imperative need for relieving the sadly overburdened facilities of the prisons and the promiscuous overcrowding, which encourages the recruiting of narcotic addicts and the general lowering of the standards of the better men, the government should establish immediately a narcotic farm and take the 2,000 to 2,500 men who are addicted to habit-forming drugs out of the federal prisons.

"A prison is no place to treat men who are afflicted with a disease. The medical profession now agrees that narcotic addiction is a disease which afflicts honest, intelligent people in all walks of life."

Selection of the sites for the proposed two farms is left to the Secretary of War, the Attorney General of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Judge Thomson Indorses Porter Anti-Dope Fight

WASHINGTON, March 31. ONE of the strongest outside indorsements received by Representative Porter of his bill for federal narrotics came from Judge W. H. S. Thomson, of the United States Court at Pittsburgh, who recently wrote the following letter:

UNITED STATES COURT,
PITTSBURGH,
March 5, 1928.

Hon. Stephen G. Porter,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Porter:

I greatly appreciate your sending me a copy of your bill for the establishment of two narcotic farms, together with your explanatory statement in connection therewith.

The problem of narcotic addiction, with its baneful consequences, physical, mental, and moral, to the addict, and the public crime which naturally follows in its wake, is worthy of the most earnest consideration, and the most effective treatment possible, by the nation and the states.

With this problem, both from a national and international viewpoint, your name will be indissolubly linked as a pioneer and successful leader in the world wide effort to relieve humanity from narcotic slavery.

I am very glad indeed, to see this additional advance movement in the solution of the problem embodied in the provisions of your bill. Prisons are necessary for the confinement of criminals, but are very bad institutions for the treatment of disease.

I most heartily approve the purpose and general provisions of your bill, and trust it may be enacted into law.

Pledged Aid

BILL TO PASS— Congressman Stephen G. Porter, of Pittsburgh, leader in the fight against dope, has been assured by House leaders that his bill providing for drug addict "farms" will pass.

Pittsburgh No Longer Smokiest City in U. S.

Pittsburgh no longer is the "Smoky City" of the United States; it is, in fact, less smoky than New York, according to the National Conference Board of Sanitation, 104 Fifth avenue, New York.

The Board of Sanitation, after an exhaustive survey in its behalf by the Mellon Institute of Pittsburgh, has issued a bulletin urging the enactment of municipal laws throughout the country to curb the smoke evil which, the report shows, annually levies a tax of $16 upon every resident of the United States.

In making the survey, smoke conditions in New York City, Newark and Jersey City, N. J., Mt. Vernon, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago and St. Louis were given close study. It was found that economically the per capita loss of the country through smoke was $16, while in addition to wasted energy smoke annually absorbs much of the healing rays of the sun and destroys trees, shrubs and flowers in municipal parks and botanical gardens.

COSTS N. Y. MUCH

Smoke in Philadelphia deprives the city of 20 per cent of its sunlight, the survey showed. New York is now spending $871,420 to resuscitate plants and flowers in Central Park, made necessary by the "smothering blanket of black smoke."

Ways for securing cleaner air for the cities of the United States by ridding them of the smoke nuisance and how different cities are dealing with the problem are detailed in the bulletin. It relates how recommendations calling for registration of all industries, hotels office buildings and apartment houses have been made in some cities and cites how education in one 30-block residential district in St. Louis reduced the nuisance by two-thirds in a year.

How coal dust injures health is cited by the bulletin in statements from Dr. Louis I. Harris, New York commissioner of health; Dr. George W. Coler, health officer of Rochester, United States Senator Royal S. Copeland, former New York health commissioner, and others.

Statements from practical engineers point out that no industrial loss would result from doing away with the nuisance, and that the gain in energy from the wasted fuel would meet the cost of changes in the industrial plants.

I. C. C. Orders Readjustment of Coal Rates to Ea

RULING GIVES SOUTH CHANCE WITH PA. MINES

Commission Holds Tariff to Seaboard District Exceptionally High.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—(AP.)—A readjustment of rail rates on coal to New England and Atlantic seaboard territory involving a number of reductions, was ordered today by the Interstate Commerce Commission, effective next June 5.

The main goal of the decision was to keep in effect the system of joint rail rates by which bituminous coal mines in Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia and Maryland have been enabled to compete with Pennsylvania and Northern West Virginia mines in supplying the fuel demands of northern territory.

HOLDS RATES ARE HIGH

At the same time the commission held that rates to New England and Atlantic seaboard consuming territory from Pennsylvania and Northern West Virginia mine districts were relatively high. From these mining points to all New England destinations except Boston and Portland, Me., the commission ordered a reduction of 15 cents on coal whenever existing rates are higher than $3.72 per ton.

To tidewater from all southern and northern mining territory, the commission held that existing coal rates are reasonable with one exception. The exception related to the rate to Baltimore from the Cumberland-Piedmont and Meyersdale mining district, where the commission held that a rate of $2.46 per ton should be made to replace an existing rate of $2.59 per ton.

From southern mining territory to New England and Atlantic seaboard territory, the commission further held, joint rates should be maintained on both high volatile and low volatile types of bituminous coal. The rates on high volatile types of coal from the South were prescribed in relation to the existing rates on low volatile from the same territory. To all destinations in New England on the New Haven Railroad, the rate on high volatile was made the same as the rate on low volatile on shipments from the New River, Pocahontas and Clinch Valley areas.

To destinations on the Boston and Maine from the New River-Pocahontas territory a rate of 15 cents less than the charge for low volatile was prescribed on high volatile, to fix rates to New England and Atlantic seaboard territory from high volatile coal originating in the Kanawha, Coal River and Logan districts the commission laid down a differential of 30 cents above the New River rate. From districts in Eastern Kentucky a rate of 45 cents above New River charges was ordered.

Reveal Swindle Plots In Wild Stock Trading

By JOSEPH H. ROGERS,
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 31.—Wholesale stock swindling was revealed today coincident with the wild trading in Wall Street.

Dishonest dealers are selling stocks on easy payments—stocks which they do not own, according to an announcement made by the Better Business Bureau. The plan, and its failure, as exposed by the bureau follows:

The victim signs a contract by which he pays one-fifth of the market price of the security at the time of the purchase.

Upon expiration of the contract, the dealer, to make delivery, purchases the security at its then market value. He gambles on a profit above what he obtains for his service charges, which profit can only accrue when the customer loses. Thus, by necessity, the dealer's interests are directly opposed to his customer's.

The victims do not reckon on the fact that the "good investments" recommended are those which the dishonest dealer believes will decrease in market value.

If, against all plans of the dealer, the stock increases in value so that the purchaser can make a profit, the dealer is the loser. In case of a prolonged bull market, the dealer is in danger of bankruptcy. In this event, the customer loses anyway, for his investment is usually lost in the mess in which the affairs of the bankrupt firm will be found.

During December, January and February, 2,514 complaints were received by investors who believed they were being cheated.

"Deal only with reliable houses" is the warning, sent country-wide to those buying and selling securities.

GIVEN OFFICE OVER PROTESTS OF DEMOCRATS

New Solon Is Republican and Will Fill Unexpired Term Of Late Senator Ferris.

International News Service.

LANSING, MICH., March 31.—Arthur H. Vandenberg, Grand Rapids publisher, was appointed United States senator today by Gov. Fred W. Green to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Woodbridge N. Ferris.

The appointment is to fill the term of the late Senator Ferris which ends March 4, 1929.

FRIEND OF GOVERNOR

Vandenberg has long been one of Green's chief supporters. Before the death of Senator Ferris he had announced his intentions to run for senator in the fall primaries.

Explaining why he appointed Vandenberg, a Republican, to succeed Senator Ferris, a Democrat, Gov. Green said:

"I have been urged by many Democrats to appoint a member of their party to fill this vacancy on the theory that Senator Ferris was a Democrat and therefore his party was entitled to the rest of the term. The voters of Michigan did not choose Senator Ferris because he was Democrat, but rather because they believed in the man himself—his rugged character, compelling personality and his record as governor."

Vandenberg is 44, a native of Grand Rapids. He started newspaper life as an office boy. At 21 he was editor. He has been an editor ever since, acquiring the title of publisher to go with it. In addition he is president of the Herald Publishing Company and director in two Grand Rapids banks.

He is author of three books and the father of three children.

Vandenberg has been active in Republican circles for many years.

DIST. ATTORNEY OUSTER BEGUN

WAYNESBURG, Pa., March 31.—O. R. Hughes, now serving his third term as district attorney of Greene county, and once Democratic candidate for judge, is not qualified to fill the office he now holds, it is contended in quo warranto proceedings which have been started to oust him. The papers were served on Mr. Hughes this morning, and he is required to appear before the Attorney General of the state April 11, to show by what authority he exercises the office.

W. H. Perrin, of Waynesburg, and Joseph Reeves, of Carmichaels, who brought the suit, allege that Hughes, who was elected to office in 1927, had not been admitted to practice before the Supreme and Superior courts one year and six months prior to his election, as required by an act of assembly.

illis' Death Tangles G. O. P. Presidential Contest

P HOOVER' IVE GROWS RE COMPLEX

Mentioned as Possibil. to Inherit Ohioan's e State Following.

HINGTON, March 31.—(AP.) udden and shocking news of th of Senator Frank B. Wil- Ohio, as he was about to presidential campaign Delaware, O., threw the hroud of mourning over within eight days and em- e Republicans in a tight angle unheard of in years. ate had barely recovered death of Senator Wood- Ferris, of Michigan, who of pneumonia March 23, received the report of the and sudden passing of the hio Senator and candidate Republican presidential on.

r Willis' death not only o a close the spectacular was making against Secre- oover for Ohio delegates to epublican convention, forcing pporters into a difficult situa- ut it also means a consider- shifting about of the Ohio rial campaign, since un- dly a Democrat will be named ccessor to Willis.

NATE CHANGE

ning that the latter course is l, it was predicted that at- would be directed toward p delegates either for Sena- tis, Senator Watson or Frank den, all of whom have en- he Ohio primary as second candidates, and all of whom een considered lined up with in opposition to Hoover. e was some speculation here that Secretary Hoover might with- draw from the Ohio fight because of the peculiar situation brought about. Mr. Hoover made no such intima- tion, however, in a statement last night in New York when he ex- pressed his sorrow over his Ohio opponent's sudden death.

One suggestion here was that in the final analysis a sizeable block of the Ohio delegates may go to Vice President Dawes, a native of that state. Dawes, however, has repeatedly said he is not a candidate for the nomination. He is considered a Lowden man.

CAPITAL SORROWS

Willis' death brought many ex- pressions of sorrow from his friends and colleagues in Washington. Among those who issued formal statements were Senator Fess, the veteran Theodore Burton of Ohio, who started the Hoover boom there; Senator Watson of Indiana, Vice President Dawes, Speaker Long- worth, Senator Curtis of Kansas, Senator Walsh of Montana, and Walter F. Roen, assistant secretary of commerce and one of Hoover's Ohio campaign managers.

Willis was chairman of the Sen- ate Territories and Insular Affairs Committee and one of the promi- nent dry leaders in the Senate. The speech he was to have made last night before his death dealt with his favorite topic, prohibition. In it he criticized Hoover's stand on that question and it was his plan to carry this argument as forcibly as he could up until the final hours preceding the primary.

His place on the territories com- mittee probably will go to Senator Bingham, of Connecticut. Sena- tor Johnson, of California, is rank- ing Republican on the committee, but he already is chairman of the immigration committee and is not expected to be willing to relinquish that post.

Prison Doors Fail To Halt Wedding

SMETHPORT, Pa., March 31.—Kenyon Blair's sentence for a minor offense in McKean county jail here made no difference in his wedding plans. Miss Lucy Coffin, Bradford, came to the jail with a license and Justice of the Peace R. C. Gleason, who performed the ceremony.

France's Most Beautiful

SILVER BLONDE—Mlle. Huquette Duflos, Parisian film actress, has been recognized as the "most beautiful blonde in France" as the result of a contest open only to native-born Frenchwomen. Her hair is almost silver in tone and her violet eyes and ivory-white features accentuate her blondeness. She's been in the movies since 1920.

DENIES SLAYING WIFE'S SISTER

NEW PHILADELPHIA, O., March 31.—William D. Herron, indicted on two counts for first degree murder for the death of his sister-in-law, Viola May, whose body was recovered from the Tuscarawas river last Wednesday, today entered a plea of not guilty. His trial probably will be set for May 10.

Herron was brought into court by Sheriff Abe Laird and after pleading was remanded to jail. He is accused of killing the girl following an attempted attack on February 7, while escorting her home.

After Herron had pleaded, his attorney, Henry Bowers, announced that he, Bowers, had received two threatening letters for taking up the defense of Herron.

Deer Destroy Young Trees Near Kane

Riis to plant the saplings during American Forest Week, April 22 to 29. Union Rebels Meet Here Today

PLAN MILITANT STRIKE TO END WAR AT MINES

Plan to Organize Women and Children for Mine Picket Duty.

One thousand delegates to the national "Save the Union" conference will meet today at 10 a. m. in the Labor Lyceum, 55 Miller street. They plan to consider militant means of making the nation-wide coal strike more effective and take steps toward the overthrow of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers.

Their meeting place had been kept a secret to prevent interference from unsympathetic quarters.

W. Z. Foster, who sprang into prominence during the steel strike, it is rumored, will be a surprise speaker at the conference.

Delegates have arrived from all parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Wyoming, Iowa, Tennessee and Indiana, it has been announced at headquarters of the "Save the Union Committee," of which John Brophy, former president of District No. 2, U. M. W. of A., is chairman. Pat Toohey, militant editor of the Coal Digger, a miners' newspaper published in Pittsburgh, is secretary of the committee and Powers Hapgood is the third member.

Delegates arriving from distant outfits are not in the least backward about voicing their intentions of stirring the strikers throughout the country to engage in mass picketing, mass violation of injunctions and other so-called progressive aims of the committee. The reorganization policy calls for organization of women and children into militant picketing bodies, nationalization of mines and a national agreement with operators in addition to the overthrow of Lewis and his supporters.

The "Save the Union" conference has been bitterly opposed during the last few weeks by officials of the United Mine Workers of America, who brand the organization and its affiliated bodies as being Communistic. Phillip Murray, international vice president, and P. T. Fagan, president of District No. 5, U. M. W. of A., were firm in their denouncement of the conference Saturday and declare they will be equally firm in expelling members who attend the sessions.

A telegram was received late Saturday from Gerry Allard, secretary of the "Save the Union Committee" in Southern Illinois, whose presence at the conference was made impossible by an injury suffered in a mine.

"Thousands of coal miners in Illinois have laid down their tools," he says. "We convey our greetings of solidarity to our striking Pennsylvania-Ohio brothers and families. You can assure our brothers who have fought for 12 long months that Illinois will never desert them again. We are in for a fight to the finish."

TO ORGANIZE WIVES

Plans to organize miners' wives throughout the Pittsburgh district will be carried out at the conference, it was stated. A meeting was held here Friday at which representatives were present from Bentleyville, Coverdale, Mollenauer, Renton, Russelton, Curtisville, Kinloch, Meadowlands, Harmarville, Sturgeon and other sections. The women will be organized into a progressive force to help win the strike, it was stated. Anthony P. Minerich addressed the women. An executive committee was elected with plans to visit every mining camp in the district to organize the women and a national conference of women's groups is being planned, according to the announcement.

A number of local unions met recently to cancel credentials previously issued to delegates to today's conference. It was revealed at headquarters of the United Mine Workers. Locals at Coverdale, Harmarville, Kinloch and Renwick took action along this line, it was announced.

U. M. W. MEETING

To combat directly the influence of the conference, announcement of a number of mass meetings was made Saturday by the United Mine Workers. Among those scheduled to speak are Murray, Fagan, William Feeney, international organizer; William Hargest, secretary-treasurer of District No. 5; John O'Leary, international board member; O. E. Gassoway, of Indiana, international board member; Thomas Robertson, district organizer; William Patton, vice president of District No. 5; Frank Hefferly, district organizer. Meetings will be held at Russelton, Bentleyville, Houston, Library, New Kensington, McDonald, Arnold City and California.

Mr. Murray, who returned from the senatorial investigation at Washington Friday night, said:

"This so-called 'Save the Union Committee,' a dual organization with communistic principles, is attempting to create dissension and disturbances in the ranks of the United Mine Workers of America. In the estimation of the bona fide members of our organization, the leaders in this dual organization are nothing but ordinary strike-breakers using the same tactics to disrupt the union as the non-union coal operators.

"They are trying to create discord in the ranks of the union miners at a time when the solid miner is fighting with his back to the wall for preservation of his organization and decent living and working conditions."

BLAME STRIKE AS FAYETTE CO. CONCERN FAILS

Bank of Pittsburgh Is Named Receiver for Sewickley Supply Company.

Business depression as a result of the coal strike was blamed for a condition which resulted Saturday in the appointment of the Bank of Pittsburgh, N. A., as receiver for the Sewickley Supply Company, which conducts general stores at Gray's Landing and Mount Sterling, Fayette county mining communities.

The receiver was appointed by Judge R. M. Gibson in Federal District Court on petition of F. Schenk and Sons Company, a West Virginia concern. Charles T. Roberts, vice president of the supply company, joined in the petition.

It was brought out in the bill of complaint that the supply company is indebted to the Schenk company in the amount of $5,976. It is also stated that the supply company, while having assets valued at twice its indebtedness, is being pressed by other creditors and that a receivership was necessary to conserve the assets.

The supply company has land, property and stock worth more than $90,000, according to the bill.

The supply company is a subsidiary of the Consolidated Coke Company, for which the Bank of Pittsburgh also has been named receiver.

PROSECUTOR REFUSES TO O. K. RELEASE

Ex-King of Bootleggers May Be Forced to Remain in Hospital Pending Action.

LIMA, O., March 31.—(AP.)—Declared sane yesterday by the Court of Appeals, George Remus, former bootleg leader and slayer of his wife, today still seemingly had a fight facing him before he is released from the State Hospital for the insane here.

The Appellate Court, by a two-to-one decision, held him mentally competent and granted him a writ of habeas corpus to liberate him from the hospital where he has been since January 6, after he was acquitted of the murder of his wife on grounds of insanity.

Barriers to his immediate release, however, were immediately erected when E. M. Botkin, Allen county prosecutor, set to work on a motion to the State Supreme Court asking a stay of execution. He planned to seek a new trial and if that failed announced he would take the motion at once into the Supreme Court.

REFUSES SIGNATURE

Efforts to obtain Remus' speedy release on the basis of the court's decision failed yesterday when Botkin refused to sign the journal entry presented by attorneys for the once-powerful bootleg chief. Botkin has two days, under the rules of the court, to sign the entry. These two days, however, do not become effective until after a motion for a new trial is made and it appeared therefore that Remus probably would spend at least several days more in the hospital.

Remus killed his wife, Imogene, last October 6, at Cincinnati as she was on her way to court to press an action for divorce. He surrendered and at his trial pleaded "temporary maniacal insanity." After a month of testimony and argument, in which Remus acted as his own chief counsel, the jury returned a verdict of acquittal after 20 minutes' deliberation. The finding declared him insane.

In the sanity hearing that followed a few days later before Judge William Lueders in Probate Court, Remus again was adjudged insane and ordered committed to the hospital. A new hearing was denied and shortly after he instituted the action for the habeas corpus writ.

Mystery Veils Movements as Ford's Liner Sails

ON ROUTE TO EUROPE--'NOT FOR BUSINESS'

Auto Magnate and Wife Occupy Ex-Kaiser's Suite in Liner Majestic.

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP.)—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford left for Europe today aboard the liner Majestic.

It is the automobile manufacturer's first trip abroad since his famous voyage to Norway on the "Peace Ship" in 1915, which was designed to "get the boys out of the trenches by Christmas." Mrs. Ford is crossing for the first time.

The Majestic's destination is Cherbourg, England. Mr. Ford said his visit would be confined to England, Scotland and Ireland, and he didn't think there would be any business connected with it."

"Oh, we are just going on a little trip—just a little trip," he said when interviewed in the "royal suite" aboard the liner shortly before she sailed at 2:10 p. m. "We have no plans at all. We're just going over and I don't think there will be any business connected with it."

Concerning conditions and plans for the Ford company, Mr. Ford said:

PLANS NO EXPANSION

"I do not think we will have any additional equipment for our plants in the near future. I do not plan to purchase any new industries or purchase any more motor car companies in the near future. My hands are pretty full. Our production now is somewhere between 1,600 and 1,700 cars daily and without a doubt by July 1, our production will be up to at least 5,000 cars a day. We do not plan to manufacture planes on a great scale in the immediate future and our advertising in the interest of aviation has been more or less visionary work."

Passage had been booked under the name of "Mr. and Mrs. J. Robinson." The greatest secrecy had cloaked all Ford's movements since his arrival in New York yesterday.

GREAT SECRECY

Mr. and Mrs. Ford boarded the ship by a private gangway to a lower deck accompanied by their son Edsel and his wife. Edsel and his wife left the ship shortly after 1 o'clock when their parents retired for the night.

The Ford party rushed past reporters and into the private elevator which carried them to the upper deck on which their suite was located. Later, however, Mr. Ford granted a short interview.

Mrs. Ford was in evening dress and a fur wrap. Mr. Ford was dressed in a gray suit and dark topcoat. He wore a flower-figured shirt, dark necktie and dark tan shoes.

The Fords arrived yesterday on the Wolverine from Detroit. Their private car was shunted to the baggage track and they entered a limousine which waited for them with curtains drawn in the freight elevator.

They drove from the station to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel where their presence was guarded by the hotel officials.

Mr. Ford said that he and Mrs. Ford expected to return on the Majestic May 7. Their suite was built for the Kaiser when the Majestic was the German liner Bismarck. It consists of two large staterooms, a sitting room, three baths and a sun parlor, which is virtually a private deck.

On Mr. Ford's last trip to Europe on the Oscar II, the "peace ship," he was refused entry by France and England, and finally landed at Christianiad, Norway. After three days, however, it was announced that he was ill and he returned to this country shortly after. His peace party of publicists and college students continued on to various other ports before returning home.

Other passengers among the 1,230 who sailed on the Majestic were Gen. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Charles Rist, deputy governor of the Bank of France, and Pierre Quesnay, research expert of the Bank of France.

"Sells" Trade, Arrested

PHOTOS BY SUN-TELEGRAPH PHOTOGRAPHER.

"PROFESSOR"—George Ferron, "teacher of engraving," skipped Pittsburgh after "selling" courses in the engraving trade to various "pupils" for $27.50 each—and did it again in Omaha for as much as $50. All the "pupil" received was the small engraving routers' tool (right), worth only about 10 cents. He was arrested by Postal Inspector George V. Craighead, Pittsburgh, and will be brought back from Omaha to face charges of using the mails to defraud.

Nab "Professor" Who Fleeced Pupils Here

George Ferron, 38, of St. Louis, Mo., who Federal officers allege organized a class to teach engraving here and then skipped, leaving each pupil a 10-cent tool for routing plates in exchange for the $27.50 tuition fee, is under arrest in Omaha, Neb. He waived preliminary hearing and will be brought to Pittsburgh to answer a charge of using the mails to defraud.

He was arrested in Omaha Thursday by George V. Craighead, postoffice inspector in the Pittsburgh district, and other government officers, when they interrupted another "class" being taught by Ferron. The Omaha tuition fee was $50, according to Mr. Craighead who returned Saturday.

But for the officers, the "professor" might have been mobbed when his Omaha "pupils" learned the reason for his arrest. Becoming to Pittsburgh he was to have conducted "classes" in Detroit, Chicago, Baltimore and Philadelphia.

APPEALS TO CRAIGHEAD

The day following his disappearance from Pittsburgh 23 of his pupils went in a body to Mr. Craighead's office and told of being fleeced. The inspector then started a nation-wide search and finally found Ferron's advertisement for pupils in an Omaha paper.

While in Pittsburgh Ferron operated under the name of the "Art-O-Gram Engraving." He was said to have obtained 47 pupils.

MINE TRUCE IN OTHER STATES COMES TO END

Conflicting Possibilities Are Ahead as Temporary Agreements Expire.

CHICAGO, March 31.—(AP.)—The last day of the truce in the union bituminous coal fields found the situation one of conflicting possibilities.

Tonight the temporary agreements under which many of the mines in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Iowa have been working expire. How many of the companies will continue at work under the Jacksonville wage scale still is problematical.

Officials of the miners' union in Illinois have stated that 22 mines will continue operations. Contracts with other mines will be made, said Harry Fishwick, president, but the number of these has not been definitely determined.

SOME SHUT DOWN

Several of the larger Illinois companies have prepared for an indefinite shutdown. The Operators' Association of this state declared a few days ago it would not deal with the United Mine Workers unless the union was willing to accept lower wages.

Only the strip mines in Indiana are expected to operate after April 1. The southwestern field, embracing Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Oklahoma mines, cannot longer work and pay the Jacksonville scale, an official of the operators stated. J. H. Morris, president of the Iowa miners, has declared the mines of his state will meet the workers' demands.

Since April 1, last, when a general suspension was ordered, the situation has changed. At that time the Ohio and Western Pennsylvania mines were working under a union agreement. Many of them during the past year have repudiated relationship with the union, and now are employing nonunion miners.

The Jacksonville scale, around which has centered a year's argument over wages, provides for $7.50 a day for day labor and $1.65 a ton for tonnage men. The union last year demanded a continuation of the wage policy. The operators refused to continue the contract and demanded a sliding scale of wages to enable them, as they said, to meet the competition of the nonunion mines. A suspension on April 1 followed.

NEW YORK, March 31.—A new bobbed-hair bandit suspect stepped into the limelight today.

When Gladys Bennett, 20, a dusky skinned beauty from Youngstown, O., was arraigned in court she was identified as the fashionably clad young woman who led a band of gunmen into at least four Harlem cabarets.

In three of the instances, police said, the band departed after looting all the patrons. In the fourth they were arrested, after a hot session of gunplay, in which two were injured.

Miss Bennett and three male companions were held without bail for the grand jury. The companions identified themselves as Mack Brown, Van Harris and George Davis, all of New York.

According to police, Miss Bennett was the "spotter" for the gang. Her duty, they said, was to go into the cabarets first and locate those patrons whose appearance indicated they had money with them. Her companions would follow her inside later, pull guns, it is charged, and line the customers against the wall, while the girl would point to those she believed had money.

FIRE QUELLED BY STREET DAM

UNIONTOWN, Pa., March 31.—A gutter dam hastily constructed at the bottom of a hill while residents poured water into the street provided a water supply that saved the town of Smithfield from being wiped out by fire last night.

When Uniontown firemen, with a pumper arrived in Smithfield, after making the nine-mile run in 12 minutes they directed a stream from the improvised reservoir that quelled the fire. The home of James Cunningham was destroyed with a loss of $7,000. The town has no water system.

WAYNESBURG, Pa., March 31.—Waynesburg will have no married women teachers in its schools. The school board has decided to issue no contracts to married feminine instructors, and a clause in each contract will provide that any marrying during the school term will automatically forfeit her position.

PREVENTION OF DECAYED TEETH

Dr. H. V. Walls, M. D. and D. D. S., Physician Dentist

P. G. Johns Hopkins Medical School, University of Paris; Hospitals, London, Edinburgh, Paris.

An eminent medical authority, Dr. Savil, London, has said, "The presence of decayed teeth is one of the commonest causes, if not the commonest of the dyspepsia of modern times, and it is an ominous feature that a large proportion of the candidates for the Army and Navy are rejected because of bad teeth."

"Badly nourished children generally inherit their type from ill nourished parents." A large percentage of morbid conditions in parents and children are directly traceable to deficiency in quality, selection, and mastication of food.

"My idea, therefore, is that in considering prophylaxis of dental caries, it is necessary to educate parents as to food value in terms of its chemical values and its proper preparations, as diet, for themselves and offspring. Judging by the number of people I see and hear of parting with their teeth without much scruples, excepting the fear of pain, it is not an exaggeration to say, that the people of the future will soon become toothless.

"The average dentist of today is becoming a 'drawer of teeth and a hewer of some device' to restore them. That the artificial fulfills to any reasonable degree the function of the natural teeth, is a common delusion. THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF TODAY ARE THE PARENTS OF THE NEXT GENERATION. It would be wise to impart more knowledge to them, of the chemistry of the body, and the quality, selection, and preparation of the food necessary for human consumption, to obtain the normal human construction, OF SWEETS as a destructive agent to teeth, there can be no doubt, but that is before and after teeth are formed. Excess of sugar creates acidosis in the body, and the secretion of the mouth also, hence the first cause of decayed teeth.

"The use of the tooth brush is necessary with an alkaline dentifrice powder, or paste. The teeth should be brushed lightly, using a rotary motion over the surfaces, at least twice a day, upon arising in the morning, and before retiring. Have your teeth examined for possible cavities at least every six months.

"I AM PLEASED to extend to the pupils of any school, FREE, the privilege of examination and consultation."

I-ON-A-CO

The I-ON-A-CO is attached to a light socket and placed about the shoulders or waist. There is no shock, no discomfort. On the contrary, the experience is altogether delightful.

Sciatica Gone and Hearing Is Again Normal

Says Mr. George J. Snyder, Telling His Experience With I-ON-A-CO.

75 Hodgson Street, Crafton, Pa. February 11, 1928

Pittsburgh Ionaco Office, 1202 Keenan Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Gentlemen:

I wish to add my testimonial to the many hundred who now sing the praises of Ionaco. For about twenty years I have been troubled with sciatica; first, in my legs, then in my arms. The pain was very severe and bothered me constantly. Many nights I have awakened from pain. Though I tried many remedies, I could only find the slightest temporary relief.

I started using the Ionaco in December, 1927. I noticed an immediate improvement and today the sciatica is completely gone.

Some years ago I had a severe cold, which settled in my left ear, causing head noises. This affected my hearing and it had become so severe I could no longer use this ear in telephoning. I was certainly surprised to find complete relief from this trouble within three weeks after starting to use the Ionaco, as I had no thought of anything ever helping this condition. It is surely wonderful to hear in this ear again.

My wife has been greatly benefited by using the Ionaco, as well as several of our friends. Being truly grateful, I sincerely hope that this letter will be used in such a manner as to interest other sufferers in my good friend "Ionaco."

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) GEO. J. SNYDER

We want you to judge the I-ON-A-CO solely on what it actually does for you. Just come into our offices and use the I-ON-A-CO for ten minutes—use it once, or several times—absolutely free. Or phone us and we will arrange for you to try the I-ON-A-CO in your own home, without obligation on your part.

The I-ON-A-CO is based entirely on the proven, scientific theory that most ill health is the result of the body's failure to completely throw off all of the natural poisons and waste matter that develop from the constant breaking down of tiny cells. The I-ON-A-CO is designed to increase oxidation, or the burning up and elimination, of this waste matter by increasing the magnetic field in and about the body.

Surely a return to health is worth ten minutes of your time.

French Note Wrecks Kellogg's Plan to Outlaw War

OFFICIALS SEE LEAGUE BACK OF DOCUMENT

Diplomats Say Alliance Would Be Most Entangling In History.

By WILLIAM P. PHYTHE,
Universal Service

WASHINGTON, March 31.—France and the League of Nations have deliberately wrecked Secretary of State Kellogg's plan for a warless world, publication of the latest French note on the subject here today reveals.

The note proved a complete enigma to officials who studied it. At first glance it appeared to be an acceptance of the Kellogg proposal for multilateral treaties for renunciation of wars. A second study showed that the acceptance was surrounded with almost insurmountable conditions so far as American policy is concerned.

Diplomatists admitted that they are unable to determine whether it may be considered an offensive or defensive document. All of them conceded, however, that acceptance would involve the United States in the most entangling alliance in history and that it completely destroys the high aims and purposes of the Kellogg scheme.

The document is regarded as of the highest importance since it is known to represent the views of the Old World powers and the League of Nations, and was discussed at the recent council of that body. It reveals that the league members have insisted on maintaining their allegiance to the military alliance to make war to end war.

Superficially, the French accept the Kellogg plan. They say that they will submit the proposal to the powers for a multilateral treaty to renounce all wars instead of merely wars of aggression.

SEE LEAGUE BACKING

However, then they name conditions which officials admit sound very much as if written in the League of Nations star chamber.

The first of these is that while the treaty will be discussed with powers at this time, it cannot become effective until every nation in the world has signed it. This in itself seems an impossible attainment here.

The second is that if any one power violates the treaty, the other nations are automatically released from their obligations and can join the war.

The third is that no nation by accepting the treaty shall surrender the right to defensive warfare. The objection to this is that defensive war is about as difficult to define as aggressive war.

The fourth is that the proposed treaty shall not encroach upon any existing treaty obligations of the powers. Since France and the other powers have offensive and defensive military alliances to fight at a moment's notice, officials see in this last condition the complete destruction of Mr. Kellogg's plan.

They say, however, that there will be another note and an effort to have the powers come to the American view.

Direct Cancer Campaign

SEEK MEMBERS—Mrs. John W. Lawrence and Mrs. William P. Witherow are taking an active part in plans for the membership campaign of the Pittsburgh Skin and Cancer Foundation which begins tomorrow. Mrs. Lawrence is a director and Mrs. Witherow chairman of the campaign committee which is mailing 70,000 letters to subscribers to the Foundations activities.

Foundation Opens Membership Drive

The Pittsburgh Skin and Cancer Foundation today begins its observance of "Membership Week" in which residents of the Pittsburgh district will be invited to join in supporting the work being carried on by this organization in the elimination of cancer through education and science.

The campaign committee, composed of Mrs. W. P. Witherow, chairman, Mrs. George B. Berger, Jr., Mrs. George L. Collard and Mrs. John W. Lawrence, is mailing 70,000 letters to prospective subscribers.

The Pittsburgh Skin and Cancer Foundation was organized in 1923 by the late Judge James H. Reed and is said to be the only organization in Pennsylvania carrying on the work against cancer. It maintains a dispensary on the second floor of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics Building, 3469 Forbes street, Oakland.

During 1927 there were 925 new patients admitted, an increase of 219 over 1926. Of the new patients, 300 were in the cancer department and 625 in the department of skin diseases. The total number of treatments given was 7,455, an increase of 464. Private physicians and agencies directly under medical management referred to the Foundation 602 patients, or 65 per cent of those received.

Until last year the work of the Foundation had been supported entirely by a small group of public-spirited men and women but it was believed that to enlarge the scope of the society public support is necessary.

REED'S POST VACANT

Since the death of Judge Reed no president of the organization has been elected or will be until the expiration of his term. Arthur E. Braun is the acting president. Other officers are: Treasurer, Roy A. Hunt; assistant treasurer, J. G. Hamilton, and secretary, Mrs. George L. Collard. Directors are Mrs. George B. Berger, Jr., Rt. Rev. Hugh C. Boyle, Louis Brown, L. H. Burnett, Harmar D. Denny, Jr., Mrs. John C. Dilworth, Joseph Dilworth, Leon Falk, Berthold Floersheim, Rev. Dr. A. C. Howell, Mrs. John W. Lawrence, W. L. Mellon, Miss Helen Blanche Rauh, United States Senator David A. Reed, Mrs. J. D. Tilford and Mrs. William P. Witherow. Senator Reed and Mr. Brown were elected to the directorate last year.

With the letters are being sent subscription cards bearing the following membership classes: Associate member, $1; contributing member, $5; sustaining member, $10; patron, $25; donor, $50; underwriter, $100. The membership entails no obligation whatever other than the payment of dues. Remittance should be made to Roy A. Hunt, treas. Pittsburgh Skin and Cancer Foundation, 3469 Forbes street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Foundation has the cooperation of such hospitals and social agencies as Mercy, Allegheny General, West Penn, Pittsburgh, Columbia at Mayview; St. Francis, St. Margaret's, Eye and Ear, Montefiore, Homeopathic, Tuberculosis League, St. Barnabas Home, Lillian Home, Harmarville Home for Convalescents and the Soho Day Nursery.

29 KILLED IN MEXICO FIGHT

MEXICO CITY, March 31.—(AP.)—Dispatches today told of additional casualties suffered by insurgents in battle with federal troops.

Delayed reports from Guadalajara said 29 were killed in a series of clashes with federal forces commanded by Gens. Rodrigo Quevedo and Victoria Camacho at various points in the state of Jalisco.

A group of 300 insurgents, under the orders of Anguian Michel, were defeated at Los Naranjos and eleven of five dead. The same group was again overtaken at San Antonio and 18 more of them killed.

Two minor engagements were fought at Barranco Del Huacal and Mezcal Blanco in which four insurgents were slain.

El Universal said that the previously reported battle at San Isidro on Tuesday and Wednesday resulted in the death of 117 insurgents. Sixty of them were captured, including two Catholic priests named Vargas and Carios. Both priests and 23 other were executed.

Dispatches from Queretaro said Don Marciano Tinajaro, in charge of the bishopric there, and a priest, Fernando Garcia, were arrested by Mexican military authorities on charges of sedition.

N. Y. Skyscraper Bombed; Eight Injured, 500 in Panic

Shot by Huntress-Wife, Attorney on Hospital Cot Begs Prosecution Be Dropped

HELD— Mrs. Esther Wilson, explorer and big game huntress who admitted to New York police that she shot her husband in his offices, may not be prosecuted, it became known last night.

AFRICA— In Africa, Mrs. Wilson found happiness even after her marriage in stalking big game. She is shown above among her trophies, of which she has many. In the tolls of the law and held without bail now, Mrs. Wilson is mortified and seeks to evade notoriety. Note in picture to the left how she dodged cameramen.

DOWNTOWN— The shooting took place in the offices of her husband, Dallett H. Wilson, prominent New York attorney and realty operator, high above the shuffling crowds of Fifth avenue.

LION— Mrs. Wilson numbered among her trophies a number of skins of lions. Here she is shown with one that once proudly covered a mighty ruler in African jungles. Her quarrel with Mr. Wilson, his office says, was about a divorce and alimony.

FREEDOM— Wilson will recover, it is believed, but from his cot he begs the prosecution be dropped. "Running around with other women," his wife told police.

BIG BUILDING ROCKED; LABOR WAR BLAMED

Five Girls Among Victims; Two Elevators Disabled as Hundreds Flee.

International News Service.

NEW YORK, March 31.—Five girls and three men were injured today when a bomb exploded in a 27-story building on West Thirty-eighth street.

The three topmost stories were wrecked, and glass and bricks showered upon the street. The blast occurred in the stairway between the sixteenth and seventeenth floors.

Seven of the injured were employed in the Eagle Cloak Company, occupying the top story. The eighth was in the Haspel Pleating company on the fifteenth floor.

Twenty-three were working in the Eagle Cloak establishment when the bomb exploded.

The blast shook the building to its foundations and threw the 500 occupants into panic. There was a rush for the three elevators, two of which were put out of commission by the explosion, as it blew in the elevator doors on the top floor.

A hole eight feet in diameter was blown through the ceiling of the sixteenth story. Had the blast occurred in the middle of the floor, instead of in the staircase, fatalities would have been certain, police believe.

The top three floors were a jumble of broken glass, splintered wood, crumbled mortar and debris. Hardly a door remained on its hinges.

Automatic sprinkler and fire escapes prevented a blaze from starting, and brought fire apparatus and police reserves were called to disperse the crowds.

Milt, It Seems, Will Stage a Dance

"Hey," announced Milton D. Crandall Saturday, "ho! The world will little note nor long remember what we say here but it will never forget that come April 23 the world's champion dance marathon will be pushed on its way in Motor Square Garden under the guiding wing of Milton D. Crandall, world's greatest lefthander."

Print that, Mr. Crandall urged. "If a promoter bites a dance marathon, that's not news, but if all the taxpayers in this glorious land dance in my backyard for a prize of 1,000 white chips, that's hot stuff.

"Listen. Those guys Stinson and that other guy splash all over page 1 because they kept off the dirt 53 hours. That's a quick minute to my gang. Didn't Bonach and Jacque stand up 61 hours in my shuffle last month? And come April 23 those boys and girls will drag along until the cows come home."

Mr. Crandall modestly admitted that entries are pouring in like molasses on a waffle. "And," he verified rumors, "I am doing this all for Art's sake—Art's and Milton's."

"The people are invited to watch my pets train," Mr. Crandall announced. "Sneak into Schenley Park any a. m. and you'll see Tony the Barber and Teeny the Tot, runners-up in the first shuffle, rounding into shape. The Natatorium gives reduced rates to my proteges for the steam racket. I may hire that guy Tunney to help the boys and girls. Sue me if I'm wrong."

"We got a guy from Youngstown by the label of Harry Wagner that danced 200 hours once. All he needs is a partner and you can spill it to the femmes. He likes blondes. I may shake a foot myself if I can find a lady that's willing. I am a great dancer. That's my middle name—Milton Dance Crandall. On with the dance! Bring on Bossy Gillis!"

Many Agencies Renew Mine Relief Efforts

Many organizations in Pittsburgh are making contributions to the striking miner and his family. Plans for continued gathering and distribution of foodstuffs, clothing and shoes are expressed by the various associations and an atmosphere of system and method characterizes their organization and work.

A partial list of those organizations dedicated to the miners' relief cause are:

ORGANIZATIONS AIDING

United Mine Workers of America, $35,000 a week distributed in strike benefits among the 230 locals of District No. 5.

Clergymen Fund for Miners' Relief, $6,000 fund to date.

Pittsburgh Business Men's Relief Committee, $30,000 fund to date.

United Mine Workers' Relief Station sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, coithing, food and shoes.

Central Labor Union Relief Committee, 16,000 pint bottles of milk distributed each week among 50 camps.

Retail Grocers' Association of Allegheny County, foodstuffs and clothing. County-wide collection to be made this week.

Pennsylvania and Ohio Miners' Relief—food and clothing to 175 locals in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Numerous other organizations contributing largely and voluntarily.

With a total of 20,000 striking miners on relief benefit, the United Mine Workers of America, District No. 5., is, of course, the largest single organization contributing to the strike relief. It was explained by union officers that there are many striking miners who have never received their strike benefit from the union, preferring to "fight it out" independently without drawing on the union's fund. And many have saved up a little money and are stretching this over the strike period, refusing aid from the union. Counting five members to a family, it was estimated there were 150,000 persons in this district affected by the strike.

CLERGYMEN ARE ACTIVE

"Last week we gave out $1,600 for food, milk, shoes and clothing," said Dr. E. N. Clopper, head of the administrative force of the joint committees of the Clergymen Fund for Miners' Relief and the Pittsburgh Business Mens' Relief Committee. "We even issued an order for Easter eggs so that the families of the striking miners in this district could celebrate, more enjoyably, the season's pleasures.

"We have 15 experienced workers in the field," Dr. Clopper added, "and, of course, our work is increasing as more and more cases are examined and reported. Already we have reached about 1,200 families in Allegheny county and some dozen or so mining villages in Washington county.

"But our work does not consist in distributing food and clothing so much as issuing orders on local stores. We do not buy wholesale, except in the cases of blankets, underclothing and stockings which we can get for less money on a wholesale basis. As the needs of the individual families are reported to us, we issue orders, the stores fill them and we pay the bill.

"Last December the clergymen met and organized its committee and sent out an appeal in January. The County Commissioners gave us headquarters in the old South School, Ross and Diamond streets, and we opened on New Year's Day. On February 1, the business men of the city organized its committee, with A. K. Oliver chairman and Arthur E. Braun, treasurer.

COMMITTEES CO-OPERATE

"The two committees met February 2 and decided to unite the administrative forces the better to function for the general relief. On the clergymen's appeal a fund of $6,000 was gathered and the business men have a fund of about $30,000. The expense of the relief work is pro rated between the two groups and everything is working satisfactorily.

"Sub-stations were opened at Broughton and Russelton, later one at Primrose, near McDonald and another at Monongahela City. Our workers call on those families whose names have been reported as being in need, they find out their situation and resources and what other relief is being given and then we supplement that aid.

"One of the greatest needs, we find, is for fresh vegetables and Glutten bread. These people were on starchy diet for so long they are in need of a more balanced diet, with tomatoes and milk necessary ingredients."

Rev. Ralph B. Urmy is chairman of the Clergymen Fund for Miners' Relief, working in conjunction with Mr. Oliver, general chairman of the joint administrative committee of the two groups.

"The $6,000 fund collected by the clergymen's committee," Rev. Urmy said, "was contributed in church collections and voluntary donations sent in. These ranged from small amounts to large checks and is representative of a general and generous contribution."

A. F. OF L. GIVES FOOD

From a distributing headquarters located at 1903 Fifth avenue, the United Mine Workers' relief station, sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, handles the dispensing of food, clothing and shoes.

Labor unions, organizations and individual donors from all parts of the country are sending in large contributions for distribution from the central agency. Boxes, barrels and bales of articles are constantly being received. The Labor Temple, Portland, Ore., is a generous donor, the Central Labor Council, Oakland, Cal., makes regular donations, the Ladies' Club of Plainfield, N. J., just dispatched three large boxes of goods. A barrel and two boxes of clothing was received from the Chicago Federation of Labor, the Happy Roamers' Club of Wilmerding is a dependable donor and from Arizona, Minnesota, Florida and Maine, the goods come in for distribution.

Local unions report to the relief station their need, trucks are sent in for supplies and there have been as many as 40 truckloads of clothing, food and shoes send out in a single week from this point.

The Central Labor Union committee for relief, of which John Hoehn is chairman, now distributes 4,000 pint bottles of milk a day for four days a week. Formerly this committee distributed milk each day of the week in 29 camps, but the general need called for a change of plans, and now 50 camps get milk four days a week. One thousand five hundred dollars a week is being spent by this committee, it was explained, and more is needed.

GROCERS SPONSOR CAMPAIGN

James Loughran, secretary and treasurer of the Retail Grocers' Association of Allegheny County, reported a campaign for this week, through which large quantities of food, clothing and money are expected to be collected.

Shipments of food are being constantly sent out by the Pennsylvania-Ohio Miners Relief Committee to practically all of the districts affected.

"Our last shipment to Ohio," explained Miss Caroline Drew, of the Pennsylvania-Ohio Miners Relief Committee," was in carload lots, and all of our distributions in this community are in two and three-ton truck loads. Funds for this work are contributed throughout the country by labor organizations, fraternal groups and other types of associations. This is strictly a miners' committee, made up of the rank and file and conducted by them."

Seton Hill Students Arrange "Egg Hunt"

Sunday Clothes To Be Overalls In Iowa Church

HENDERSON, Ia., March 31. THE "Sunday - go-to - meetin' clothes" at the Henderson Christian Church will consist, at the suggestion of the Rev. G. D. Noland, of overalls for men and similarly modest attire for the women.

The pastor objects to the church being made a place for dress parade. He said many men stayed away from services because they felt they could not dress up to the occasion.

"This is not to be a show," he explained. "I merely want the working people to know that my church and I are one of them."

The minister himself plans to wear overalls.

GROCERS COME TO COAL STRIKE SUFFERERS' AID

Retail Association Members To Turn Stores Into Relief Stations.

Food and clothing!

These are the crying need in the poverty-stricken coal fields adjacent to wealthy and prosperous Pittsburgh. Thousands of women and children, victims of Pittsburgh's coal strike for a whole year, are actually in need of food. Many of them are wearing ragged clothing; some of them have hardly enough to cover their bodies.

Realizing the necessity of alleviating as far as possible this unwarranted suffering among the "noncombatants" in this gigantic industrial struggle, the Retail Grocers' Association of Allegheny County have offered their aid.

Beginning Monday, every retail grocery store in the county will be turned into a "Miners' Relief Headquarters." Contributions are being sought from every source. The public as well as wholesalers and others who come into daily contact with the grocer are being asked to join in making the relief campaign one of the outstanding drives of the strike. Any contributions will be welcome—food, clothing or money. Each grocer will turn his collection over to a central distributing center which will be under the jurisdiction of the local office of the American Federation of Labor.

Signs, designating headquarters for "Miners' Relief," have been distributed to grocers throughout the county by J. V. Loughran, secretary and manager of the County Grocers Association. A stirring letter urging earnest co-operation in the campaign, has been sent to every member of the organization. Many of the grocers are starting off their collections by making large contributions of their own. In addition they are asking wholesalers to contribute.

All the officers of the Retail Grocers' Association are co-operating in the drive. Joseph Kasper is president; H. M. Wonn, vice president, and H. F. Donnelly, treasurer. They have joined in issuing an appeal to members of the association.

Vho's Who in Chicago Dry Fight Dims Primary War

OMPSON UP N ARMS OVER FEDERAL RAIDS

nds Agents' Tactics in ooting of Bailiff as High anded; Cites City's Virtues

ICAGO, March 31.—(AP.)—ago's millions, with their polit- aplomb jarred within the fort- t by bursting bombs and shot- assassinations, looked today for ossible connection between re- t activities of special prohibi- agents and the torrid primary tion campaign.

Vho's who in prohibition enforce- t in Chicago has become for the e-being a more interesting ques- than which Republican faction come out in front at the April voting.

he shooting by dry agents ursday night of William Beatty, nicipal court bailiff and worker the Mayor Thompson-State's At- ney Crowe Republicans, has been lowed by Beatty's indictment by Federal grand jury on a charge resisting an officer. The Beatty e has brought Federal and po- e authorities into apparent con- t, due to the action of the raid- agents in preventing police m interfering after Beatty had n shot during a saloon raid.

AY TACTICS HIGH-HANDED

Both Mayor Thompson and his lice commissioner, Michael ughes, took a stand against what ey believe to be high handed tac- employed by the raiding Fed- nen.

ce indicated they planned to warrants against the Federal for shooting Beatty, who is re- ng from his wounds. The com- ner said he would see that the ts were served, "regardless attempt on the part of the men to resist service."

Thompson charged the of Beatty to "the Deneen —the Republican faction, ed by United States Senator neen, which is opposing Thomp- n candidates at the primaries.

CAN'T SHOOT CITIZENS"

"The federal government can't shoot down citizens in Chicago and get away with it," the Mayor said.

Commissioner Hughes answered Deneen group criticism of crime con- itions in Chicago under the Thomp- on administration by declaring that p to late yesterday there had been o major crime reported to the police r 24 hours, "unless you call the hooting of a court bailiff by federal officers a crime."

The commissioner was particularly angry over treatment of his men by federal agents at the scene of the Beatty shooting.

"I want to know," he said, "whether a bunch of gun-toting toughs can come into Chicago and shoot an unarmed man and then tell the police department to go chase itself."

In an interview with the Associated Press, Mayor Thompson enumerated the city's virtues and declared that crime has been greatly reduced under his administration.

CITES CITY'S VIRTUES

"We have the best health record of any big city. We have the most wonderful park, playground and school system for children. We have wonderful industries, and they are growing. Business is good in Chicago and getting better," he said.

"Crime? Sure we have crime. Chicago is just like any other big city. Crime there is, and probably always will be, but it is dwindling. There will be bombings as long as there is prohibition."

Police were told last night by Albert R. Brunker, a manufacturer friendly to the Deneen faction, that a threat had been made to mob his home and kidnap his small daughter if he did not stay out of politics. A police guard was placed at his home.

GET BOMB THREAT

Circuit Court Clerk Thomas Wallace, a Thompson candidate for reelection, was another who received a telephone threat that he would be bombed. The Wallace home was bombed in 1921.

No clue had been found today to the motive for placing a bomb consisting of 16 sticks of dynamite at the South Water Street Produce Market. The snowfall extinguished the fuse.

The body of the man shot to death and then set fire, which was found on a lonely road Thursday night, was identified by his wife as Charles Adragna, an "Alky peddler" and friend of the slain Diamond Joe Esposito. This slaying was outside the city limits.

Bought Own Home

DIVORCED— Mary Aiken, former movie actress, recently divorced from Edwin Carewe, director, bought and paid for her Beverly Hills home—Carewe didn't, she says in an interview in California. The cash settlement at the time of the divorce was $110,000 and the home cost her $37,500 of that. Frequently, it has been said that Carewe also gave her the home. Furthermore, Miss Aiken says, Carewe divorced her in Mexico after she refused to do so when he asked her. She would have agreed to divorcing him in the United States, she says.

SETTLE COUNTY DAMAGES SOON

Property damage claims amounting to nearly $200,000 will be paid by the county within the next two weeks. Saturday, County Commissioners authorized transfer of $200,000 as a temporary loan from the general fund to the road bond fund to meet the obligations.

The loan, commissioners stipulated, was to be returned to the general fund from county taxes to be paid this year. Twenty-four of the claims are for damages incurred by the improvement of Freeport road. A number of smaller claims resulting from improvements to other county and state roads, already settled, will be paid.

HESS AIDE, CLAIM

Shevens is accused of murder in connection with the clubbing of an unidentified white man on the Monongahela River bank near Browns Bridge, September 1. Stevens, who lives at 214 Hazel way, West Homestead, and Alvin Hess, 16, of 247 Hazel way, who was convicted Wednesday of first degree murder with life imprisonment as the penalty, were jointly charged with the murder and granted a severance in trials. Assistant District Attorney George F. P. Langfitt will be opposed by Attorney William H. Coleman and Gertrude Friedlander.

A. C. Leslie of 5425 Plainfield street, E. E. Reiss of 1151 Peermont avenue, Dormont, and J. C. Umstead of 2924 Espy avenue, Dormont, will be tried for conspiracy in connection with the alleged wrecking of the Pittsburgh Deposit and Title Company, which closed last September.

Leslie and Reiss were officers of the bank, Leslie having been president, and Umstead was general manager of a building company. It is alleged that these three, with others unidentified, conspired to place large loans on property, chiefly in the South Hills, on representations that the property was improved with dwellings, whereas the property was not improved or was only semi-improved, and the transactions resulted in heavy losses.

FACE OTHER CHARGES

Leslie and Reiss also were indicted on 11 charges of misdemeanor. They were accused of receiving about $293,000 deposits after the bank was insolvent.

All three trials are listed for Monday. The April grand jury will convene Monday, facing about 1,000 bills, and two new panels of 120 jurors each will report for two weeks' duty in Criminal Court. Judge Joseph M. Swearingen will continue as presiding judge.

Trade Board Elects Directors by Mail

Election of 16 new members of the board of governors of the East Liberty Trade Association has been completed by mail. The election committee hopes to tabulate the votes early next week. Close to 400 ballots were received. Names of the winners will be announced following certification of the election records by the present board of governors, in compliance with the association's custom. There were 32 candidates for the 16 places on the governing body, and indications are that several of the old board, along with some new members, have been named to the board.

3 ASK $55,000 FOR INJURIES

Elmer Doelfel, 112 Greenfield avenue, entered suit in Common Pleas Court against the Oakland Hand Laundry, Atwood street, asking $10,000 damages for personal injuries received last April 16, when a truck owned by the defendant collided with a motorcycle on which the plaintiff was riding at Semple and Bates streets.

Joseph Butler entered suit against the Pittsburgh Transportation Company asking $20,000 damages for injuries received when he was struck by a taxicab last February 25 while crossing Ellsworth avenue at Aiken avenue.

Joseph Farrell and Mary Farrell, his wife, claim $25,000 damages from J. B. Marshall in a suit filed in Common Pleas Court. They allege that in a collision with an automobile owned by Marshall at Bayard street, last October 19, Mrs. Farrell was seriously injured.

FALL DENIES RECEIVING OIL LEASE BRIBE

Ex-Secretary, in Deposition, Declares Everything Above Board.

EL PASO, Tex., March 31.—(AP.)—Finishing up on direct examination his testimony that the leasing of the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve to Harry F. Sinclair was conducted above board, untinged with bribery, Albert B. Fall today summoned strength for a grilling at the hands of Atlee Pomerene, special government prosecutor in the oil case.

Members of Fall's family said the 67-year old former secretary of the interior, refreshed by a night's rest, was anxious to submit to questioning by Pomerene, former Senator from Ohio, with whom Fall had engaged in many sharp battles in the Senate when Fall represented New Mexico in that body.

Fall again was interrogated today by Daniel Thew Wright, counsel for Sinclair, whose trial on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government in connection with the oil lease is scheduled to open in Washington next Wednesday.

In his direct examination, the equivalent of being on the witness stand in court for more than two days, Fall has told his story of the oil deal which resulted in the indictment of himself and Sinclair and the return to the government of the oil reserve.

He denied there was anything improper in the lease transaction and insisted it was carried out in the course of the usual business of the Interior Department.

Sinclair himself had nothing to do with the actual preliminary negotiations, Fall insisted, and at one time rejected the lease because Fall wanted larger royalties for the government.

The $233,000 in Liberty bonds which he received from the oil magnate, Fall declared, did not enter into the Teapot Dome deal. The Liberty bonds, Fall said, were for a one-third interest in his Tres Ritos Cattle and Land Company ranch, on which Sinclair wanted to breed race horses and establish a country club. This deal, Fall maintained, did not get under way until after the Teapot Dome lease was signed.

Pitt Pupil Inventor Of Rail Signal Light

Youth will be served!

Once again a "typically American" youth, or one whom we like to consider as "typically American," has come into the limelight simply because he used his head. C. C. Caveny, of Altoona, though still an undergraduate student in the engineering school of the University of Pittsburgh, is well on his way toward fame and fortune as a result of several inventions for which he is mainly responsible. He is the inventor of the first successful electric switch lamp for railroads which he marketed himself and which is now being used by most of the standard railroads throughout the country. He was aided in this invention by C. J. Reigh, an ingenious mechanic of Altoona.

These young men began their attempt to find a means of lighting signal lamps electrically while working as maintainers of telegraph and signals for the railroad. Many attempts had been made to replace the oil lamps, used until the present time, with electric lamps, but all had been unsuccessful. They observed that frequently the wind blew out the flame of the oil lamp, or carbon, which had collected on top of the lamp and fallen down, would extinguish the flame. They tried many methods of lighting these lamps electrically and in 1925 took out a patent for a lamp which proved to be a complete success.

Young Caveny, who holds many other patents in signal work in addition to the electric switch lamp, expects to receive the degree of bachelor of science in engineering in June from the University of Pittsburgh. His education has suffered many interruptions since his fifteenth year when he was forced to leave school because of financial difficulties.

At that time he began working for the railroad as messenger boy, but advanced to clerkship after he had completed a night course in stenography. Wishing, however, to become an engineer, he left that position to take one at half the salary laying underground wires in the telegraph and signal department of the railroad.

Just before the war, he applied for admission to a university in Michigan where he was admitted without full secondary school credentials, but which he left to enlist in the army when the war broke out. After the war he obtained work as a maintainer of the telegraph and signals for the railroad. However, "because of distinguished service in France," the government offered him an education and he came to Pitt, after completing his preparatory work in Detroit.

During his varied career he has acted as secretary to the business manager of a Detroit newspaper, has worked for motor car companies, and has held numerous positions with the railroad company.

Inventor

STUDENT—C. C. Caveny, Altoona, student at the University of Pittsburgh, is the inventor of an electrical signal lamp now in general use on a number of railroads. He expects to receive his Bachelor of Science degree from the engineering school in June.

P 3 AIR HEROES LAND IN JAPAN

TOKIO, March 31.—(A.P.)—Dieudonne Costes and Joseph Lebrix, French fliers who flew across the South Atlantic Ocean, and Arthur Goebel, winner of the Dole flight to Honolulu, arrived here today aboard the steamship Korea Maru. An elaborate reception and many entertainments will be held in their honor.

The Frenchmen expect to hop off for Hanoi, French Indo-China, on April 4.

Goebel will probably remain several months demonstrating airplanes in various parts of the Orient. Afterwards, he said, he might fly back across the Pacific to America, although he considered it improbable.

New Brighton Bids Fisher to Unveiling

NEW BRIGHTON, Pa., March 31.—Gov. John S. Fisher, Auditor General Edward Martin, and Secretary of Welfare Mrs. E. S. H. McCauley, have been invited to attend the dedication of the monument to the World War soldiers here April 12. The monument was erected by public subscription, and was sponsored by the American Legion and the Business Men's Association.

Armstrong to Spend Million on Roads

KITTANNING, Pa., March 31.—More than a million dollars will be spent this summer in Armstrong county in the construction of roads. The county will have approximately 20 miles more of hard surfaced highway by fall and other roads will be repaired. Three projects are already under contract and a fourth is scheduled to be let the middle of next month.

Male Help Wanted 2

Wanted—the Man

A New York investment house of the highest standing, with branches throughout the United States, desires to add a representative or two in Pittsburgh and the surrounding territory. While previous securities selling experience would be desirable, it is not entirely necessary, although applicant should have inherent selling ability and a successful sales record in other lines. We have a valuable and permanent connection for the right man. All replies will be treated in strictest confidence and be opened by an executive. Our own men have been advised of this advertisement. Address T-194, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

MEN.

Our big spring rush is now on.

Men making more money than ever before.

New developments taking place in our business, making still larger earnings possible.

Mr. M. made $644 in one week. Three hundred and forty-five dollars of this he made in one day of that week.

Mr. S. made $138 one day recently.

Mr. B. has earned $782 during March, up to and including March the 28th.

This is his first month in this business.

Mr. H. has made $1,426 during the first 28 days of March.

These men are all working out of this office.

Scores of men all over the U. S. A. are earning from $7,000 to $15,000 per year.

What effort would you put forth? How much time would you spend to be able to make the money these men are making?

A new era in the development of our business is now taking place. Earnings of our salesmen are now on a surer and sounder basis than ever before.

Our confidence in this business is reflected by the fact that we just completed the purchase of property adjoining our present factory for $500,000, which will enable us within two years to double our present capacity and output.

We manufacture and market our own specialty, which has an exclusive field as big as that of the automobile.

There are no hard times in this business.

We have an article that is needed as much as bread and sugar, and still it is sold on specialty basis and pays a splendid specialty commission. It is backed by eight basic iron-clad patents.

This is truly a business of opportunity for experienced specialty salesmen and inexperienced men in all walks of life are also finding success with us and you need not invest one penny.

Men outside of Pittsburgh, write for address of our nearest branch office.

Men in Greater Pittsburgh, call at once.

WHY

Are Home Builders demanding "CURTIS" woodwork? Is it because it is correct in design to make it look just right and harmonize with its surroundings, scientifically manufactured for lasting service, reasonable in price, and trademarked for quality?

Yes, all of these. But, in addition, because it is NEW in vogue and fills the MODERN home builder's needs.

In our HOMES Service work we recommend and use nothing but "CURTIS" woodwork.

To get this woodwork in your new home call at any of our four yards or our downtown display room for a demonstration and advice regarding it.

Bluffs Bank Bandits

KILLS ONE— George Fisher, Canadian war veteran, foiled bank bandits in Los Angeles because he is nervy and knows how to handle weapons. One bandit is dead and police have the other two. Hired to guard the Merchants National Trust and Savings Bank, he killed one bandit and when the other two threatened to shoot girl employes if he didn't cease firing he called their bluff and with more shots forced them to drop their own weapons.

Worm-Infested Soil Dangerous to Chicks

Soil is the most common medium through which intestinal parasites are spread. Intestinal parasites include round worm, tapeworms, caeca worms, the coccidiosis—producing germ and several other forms of worms. The worms lay eggs which pass out with the feces.

The birds while scratching and feeding pick up these eggs and infest themselves. Earthworms, flies, snails, also eat these eggs. If the chickens eat these insects they become infested.

The intestinal worms live in the bird's digestive tract. Chickens badly infested with worms may be fed a complete ration but starve to death. Worms get the benefit of the feed, and thrive and reproduce.

The coccidiosis germs eat at the inside walls of the intestines and cause them to become sore and irritated. Birds with injured intestines cannot assimilate their feed properly. Heavy mortality often results and many birds that do not die are stunted for life.

CLEAN GROUND

Clean ground may be defined as ground which is free from all poultry disease, infection or parasitic infestation. Poultry should be raised on ground where no chickens have ranged for two years or longer. No poultry manure should have been scattered over this ground during the same length of time. About an acre of ground should be provided for every 300 chicks.

The range should be plowed and cropped the years it is not used for chickens. Even though the brooding house is moved to clean ground at the beginning of the season, it is a safe practice to occasionally move the house and outdoor hoppers to clean areas away from the bare spots.

CONFINEMENT

Where no clean ground is conveniently available for chick range, the chicks should be reared in confinement. An ordinary brooder house with a board or concrete platform is sufficient for as long as the chicks need heat. After the brooding period the market cockerels can be removed and the pullets moved with the farmstead.

If there is no clean ground for summer range the pullets should be confined to the house and platform until they are ready for the winter quarters. Fly screening should be used to enclose the platform on the top and sides. Cover the window openings and have a fly-tight screen door during the summer. It is necessary that all joints and cracks be tight so no flies, earthworms or other parasite carrier can get to the birds.

SUN PARLOR

The platform is provided principally for allowing the chicks to get direct sunlight. Sunlight is necessary for normal growth and helps to prevent leg weakness. For 200 chicks the platform should be at least 6x8 feet and 2 feet high. Not more than 300 chicks should be brooded in a house when reared in confinement.

CLEANING IMPORTANT

The house and platform inclosures should be constructed so they can be cleaned easily. Build the inclosures in panels. The panels can be held together with hooks and eyes so the inclosure can be taken apart for cleaning. This will simplify cleaning.

CHICK VICES

Chicks that are closely confined are likely to "toe-pick" and pull feathers. Toe-picking is worse when chicks are young. Feather pulling is most serious when the pin feathers grow out. The following practices help to control cannibalism in chicks:

Put one teaspoonful of an iodized table salt in each gallon of drinking water. Do not feed more. Salt is poisonous to chickens if fed in excess.

Paint the injured parts with tar. Darken the house by placing old sacks over the windows or tinting the windows with blue paint. This casts a blue hue in the house and chicks cannot see the red blood.

CHICK CACKELS

C. B. Irwin, proprietor of the Highland Farms, Freeport, Pa., reports wonderful results in day-old chick sales from the "ad" he has been running in these columns.

Joe Hilldorfer has just received five blue ribbons for fox-terriers shown in different sections of the country.

Another chicken man who is gaining fame in the industry not only for egg production but also for the excellent results in the sale of day-old chicks is Herman Bandi, whose farm is located out the Harmony route. He is probably the only man in this section who trapnests, and those buying his chicks are thereby assured of getting hens of a high-laying strain.

Thompson Joins Boggs and Buhl

Jack Thompson, Pittsburgh radio entertainer noted for his ready humor and witty anecdotes, has joined the interior decorating staff of Boggs & Buhl, an announcement Saturday states. As a member of the department store organization Mr. Thompson will devote his efforts to aiding home creators in the beautifying of their dwellings and room arrangements.

Chicken Cackles

We haven't heard anything from Garland of Oakdale lately, but we presume that he is on the job as usual, getting out his hatches. He once stated to this writer that a man operating a chicken farm hasn't much time for any other diversions.

While the weather we have had for the past two weeks has not been ideal for chicken raisers, those who keep their chicks in good, warm brooding houses are experiencing no difficulties.

We understand that Floyd Wiltshire who operates a 15,000-egg incubator in East McKeesport, has received orders enough to run him up until May 1 for the day-old chicks.

Arnold Schauman, proprietor of the American Pet Shop, Smithfield street, maintains a storage brooder for his day-old chicks. This brooder is capable of about 900 chicks and the temperature is automatically maintained by a thermostat.

The Art Pet Shop, 843 Third avenue, will move into its new home, 104 Smithfield street, about May 1.

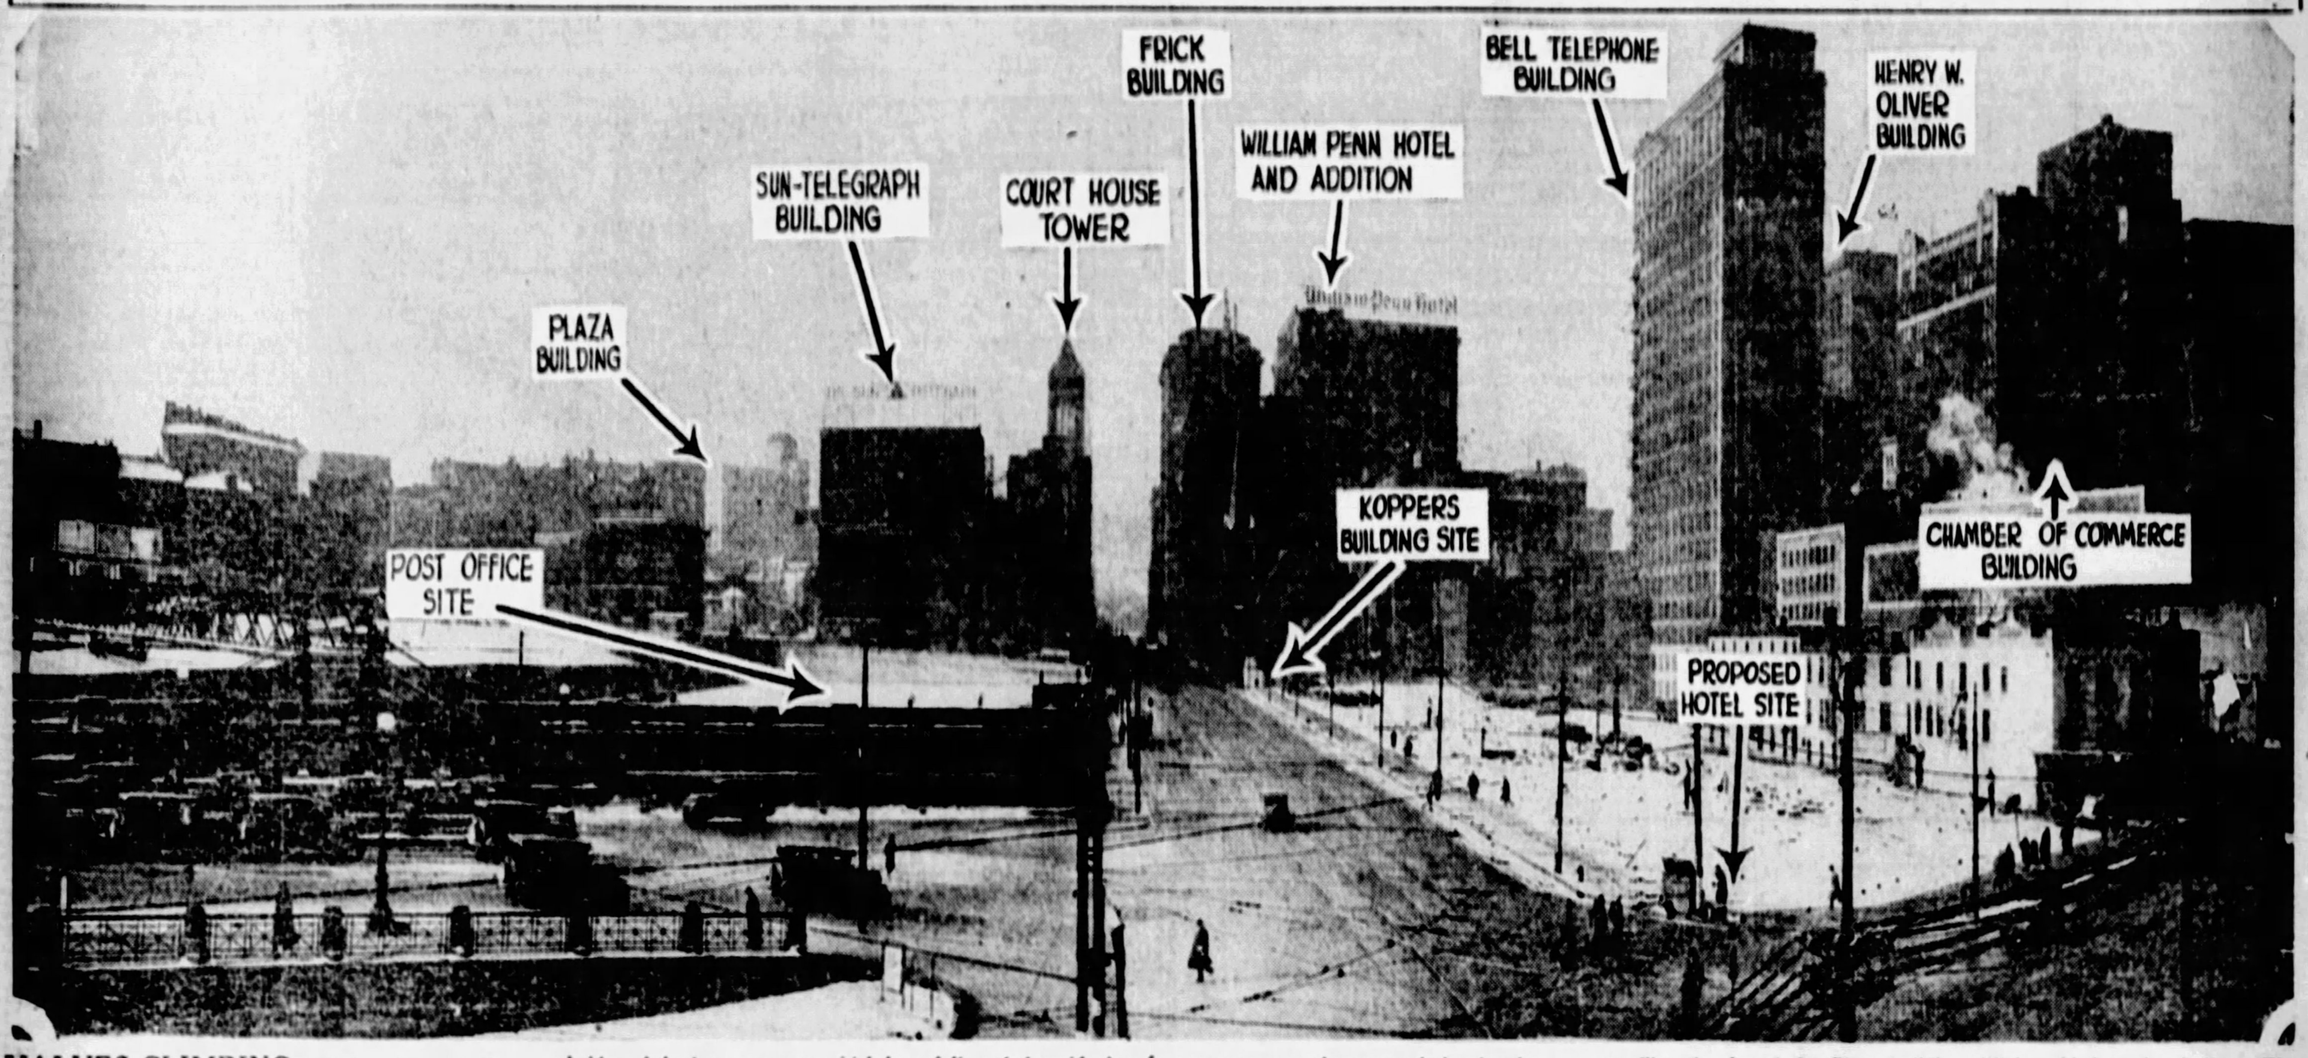
Grant Street Developing Into One of City's Finest

Looking Out Grant Street Where Big Projects Are Developing in Downtown Pittsburgh



VALUES CLIMBING—This view of Grant street, looking south from its intersection with Liberty avenue and the approach to Pennsylvania station gives a good idea of the improvements which have followed the widening and relocation of the street. Projects already started within the scope of this picture will change it beyond recognition within the next five years. Action is expected within the present year on the appropriation for the new postoffice, the site for which is seen at the left. A new Sun-Telegraph building will rise at the right of the present building seen in the picture. The receding towers of the Koppers Building and the Grant building will be added to the skyline. The William Penn Hotel addition will be four-stories higher than the old building. Efforts are being made to finance a new hotel, the site for which is at the right of the picture.

Property Values Gain 40 Per Cent in 2 Years

By M. V. BURGESS.

Grant street real estate has been very active following a series of improvements and building operations which are changing its entire appearance. From a crooked and rather narrow thoroughfare, Grant street is developing into one of the best streets in downtown Pittsburgh.

Property values have increased sharply. Within the last two years, is conservative to say that prices Grant street property have increased 40 per cent.

[illegible] two years ago, Grant street was a [illegible]ar mixture of good and bad [illegible]as 60 feet wide throughout its [illegible]th. Its best property was be[illegible]n Fourth and Sixth avenues [illegible]eventh avenue, it was virtually [illegible]ad-end street, coming to an [illegible]pt halt at the Pennsylvania [illegible]econd freight sheds.

[illegible]STY TRADES PROPERTY

[illegible]e city reached an agreement [illegible] the Pennsylvania Railroad to [illegible]te New Grant street and ex[illegible]e old Grant street through as an [illegible]0-foot thoroughfare to Liberty avenue. The street was widened from 60 to 80 feet as far south as the Boulevard of the Allies, street car tracks were installed to care for a number of the South Hills lines, and arrangements were completed to carry three lanes of traffic each way.

The site for a new Pittsburgh postoffice, approximately 82,000 square feet, is located along Grant street north of Seventh avenue on the spot where a part of the freight sheds of the Pennsylvania Railroad formerly stood. Plans for the new postoffice call for a 12-story building to cost in the neighborhood of $6,500,000, caring for all of the federal offices of the Pittsburgh district.

On the opposite side of Grant street is 108,836 square feet owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad. It was on this ground that a large [illegible]otel and office building were plan[illegible]d by Pittsburgh interests, but the [illegible]nal undertaking has been aban[illegible]. There is still a movement [illegible]ot to build a hotel on the 37,000 [illegible]e feet at the Liberty avenue [illegible] the parcel.

[illegible] DEAL RUMORED

The Gulf Oil Corporation was [illegible]nnected recently with rumors con[illegible]rning a new building on the [illegible]venth avenue end of the property, [illegible] reports of a purchase have been discredited by those who should be in a position to know.

At the time of the original hotel project the entire parcel was offered by the Pennsylvania Railroad at $5,000,000. This is at the rate of $45.94 a square foot.

At the southwest corner of Seventh avenue and Grant street the Koppers Company is building its new 32-story skyscraper on ground fronting 90 feet on Grant street and 196 feet on Seventh avenue. The construction of this building will cost more than $2,000,000. The ground was obtained from a number of individual owners.

The Grant School property immediately south of the Koppers Building site contains 19,650 square feet. An idea of values may be had from the fact that the Board of Public Education turned down $60 a square foot for this parcel, representing $1,179,000.

PROPERTY VALUE HIGH

The Grant Street Lutheran Church property across Strawberry way from the Grant School location contains 10,800 square feet. The church has been offered $650,000 for this property, or more than $60 a square foot, and has refused it.

The Sun-Telegraph recently acquired 180x60 feet at the southeast corner of Grant street and Strawberry way. Of this, 115x60 feet was leased for a long term and two parcels, 40x60 and 25x60 feet, were purchased. Plans are being prepared for a new building affording larger facilities for newspaper publication.

The new American State Bank Building has been completed at the northeast corner of Sixth avenue and Grant street. At the southwest corner, the steel for the 24-story addition to the William Penn Hotel is nearing the height limit.

Progress on the new Grant Building, at the southeast corner of Grant street and Fourth avenue, is well up to schedule. This building will be a 25-story structure. It fronts 171 feet on Grant street, 120 feet on Fourth avenue and 149 feet on Third avenue.

VALUES TREBLED

A few comparisons of sales made 28 years ago along Grant street show values which have trebled. When Henry Clay Frick, in 1900, bought the northwest corner of Grant street and Fifth avenue, the old St. Paul's Cathedral site, he paid $25 a square foot for 240x240 feet. That was considered a record price at that day. The Union Trust Building is now on the ground.

In 1899 part of the ground under the Bakewell Building sold for $15.38 a square foot. In 1900 a small lot at 603 Grant street sold for $19.66 a square foot. This is only a few feet from the Grant Street Lutheran Church and is now the property of A. W. Mellon.

A part of the triangle now owned by the city at Grant street and Sixth avenue sold in 1900 for $15.50 a square foot. A part of the present site of the new American State Bank Building sold in 1903 at $23.78 a square foot.

A portion of the site of the City-County Building sold in 1902 for $2.80 a square foot. In 1905 some ground in the same block sold for $32.05 a square foot. The site of the Berger Building, at the northwest corner of Grant street and Fourth avenue, was purchased in 1906 for $46.77 a square foot.

Before the widening of Grant street, a property at 644 Grant street sold in 1926 for $26.25 a square foot. The old General Grant Hotel property at 606 Grant street sold for $52.27 a square foot in the same year. In 1924, the Grant Street Reformed Presbyterian Church, near Sixth avenue, sold for $20.58 a square foot.

GREATER CITY TALK ARRANGED

The proposed metropolitan plan of government for Allegheny county will be discussed by Dr. Thomas H. Reed before the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board Tuesday at the William Penn Hotel.

Dr. Reed is head of the bureau of government in the department of political science at the University of Michigan. He has been granted a leave of absence to work on the Pittsburgh problem as director of research of the metropolitan commission. The metropolitan plan and the enabling constitutional amendment will be voted on by the people of the entire state this fall.

Realtors to Tour Historic Kentucky

Kentucky's historical background, scenic beauties and spirit of hospitality play important parts in the entertainment arranged for visitors to the twenty-first annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in Louisville, June 18 to 22.

A large party of Pittsburgh realtors will make the trip to Louisville and see the interesting spots of Kentucky in special tours. These points include Mammoth Cave, Churchill Downs, the famous Bluegrass section, the "Old Kentucky Home," Abraham Lincoln's birthplace, Henry Clay's home, George Rogers Clark's and Zachary Taylor's tombs, Camp Henry Knox and Jefferson Davis' birthplace.

Mammoth Cave probably has the widest attraction for visitors, in view of the fact that the state is completing a campaign for $2,500,000 to buy the Mammoth Cave area for presentation to the United States government as a national park. Congress has already provided for the erection of hotels and building of roads.

Located about 75 miles from Louisville and accessible both by hard-surfaced roads and railroads, the cave area has attained international fame for its subterranean wonders. There are no less than 90 caves in this territory that have been explored, and Mammoth Cave is largest. Colossal Cavern is somewhat smaller, but far more magnificent and beautiful. Nearby is Sand Cave, where Floyd Collins was imprisoned two years ago.

CUBS BEAT PIRATES AGAIN, 3-2

THE SUNDAY SUN-TELEGRAPH SPORTS

SUNDAY, APRIL 1, 1928 (Combining The Pittsburgh Sunday P... PART 4. PAGE 1

DEFENDER—Gene Tunney, heavyweight boxing champion, who will defend his title against Tom Heeney of New Zealand in July, according to announcement by Promoter Tex Rickard, who said the match might be staged in London.

CUYLER DRIVES IN TWO RUNS WITH HOME RUN AND SINGLE; MILJUS, JONES IN FINE FORM

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.

LOS ANGELES, March 31.—The Cubs made it three in a row over the Pirates this afternoon in the big spring festival being staged as a rare treat for Coast League fans. The exciting diamond fight, played under ideal conditions in Wrigley Field and witnessed by approximately 13,000 fans, carried a 3-to-2 score.

Hazen (Ki) Cuyler once more was an outstanding figure in the success of the Bruins. Cuyler put the Cubs out in front in the fifth with a homer and in the seventh with two out he singled to drive over a safety tally.

The former Pirate star was applauded to the echo by the multitude when he whacked the ball into the right field bleachers to break a deadlock. John Miljus was on the slab at the time.

The third clash of the spirited rivals brought out a lot of fine pitching. Percy Jones, the lean left-hander who suffered much arm trouble last year, was a real puzzle

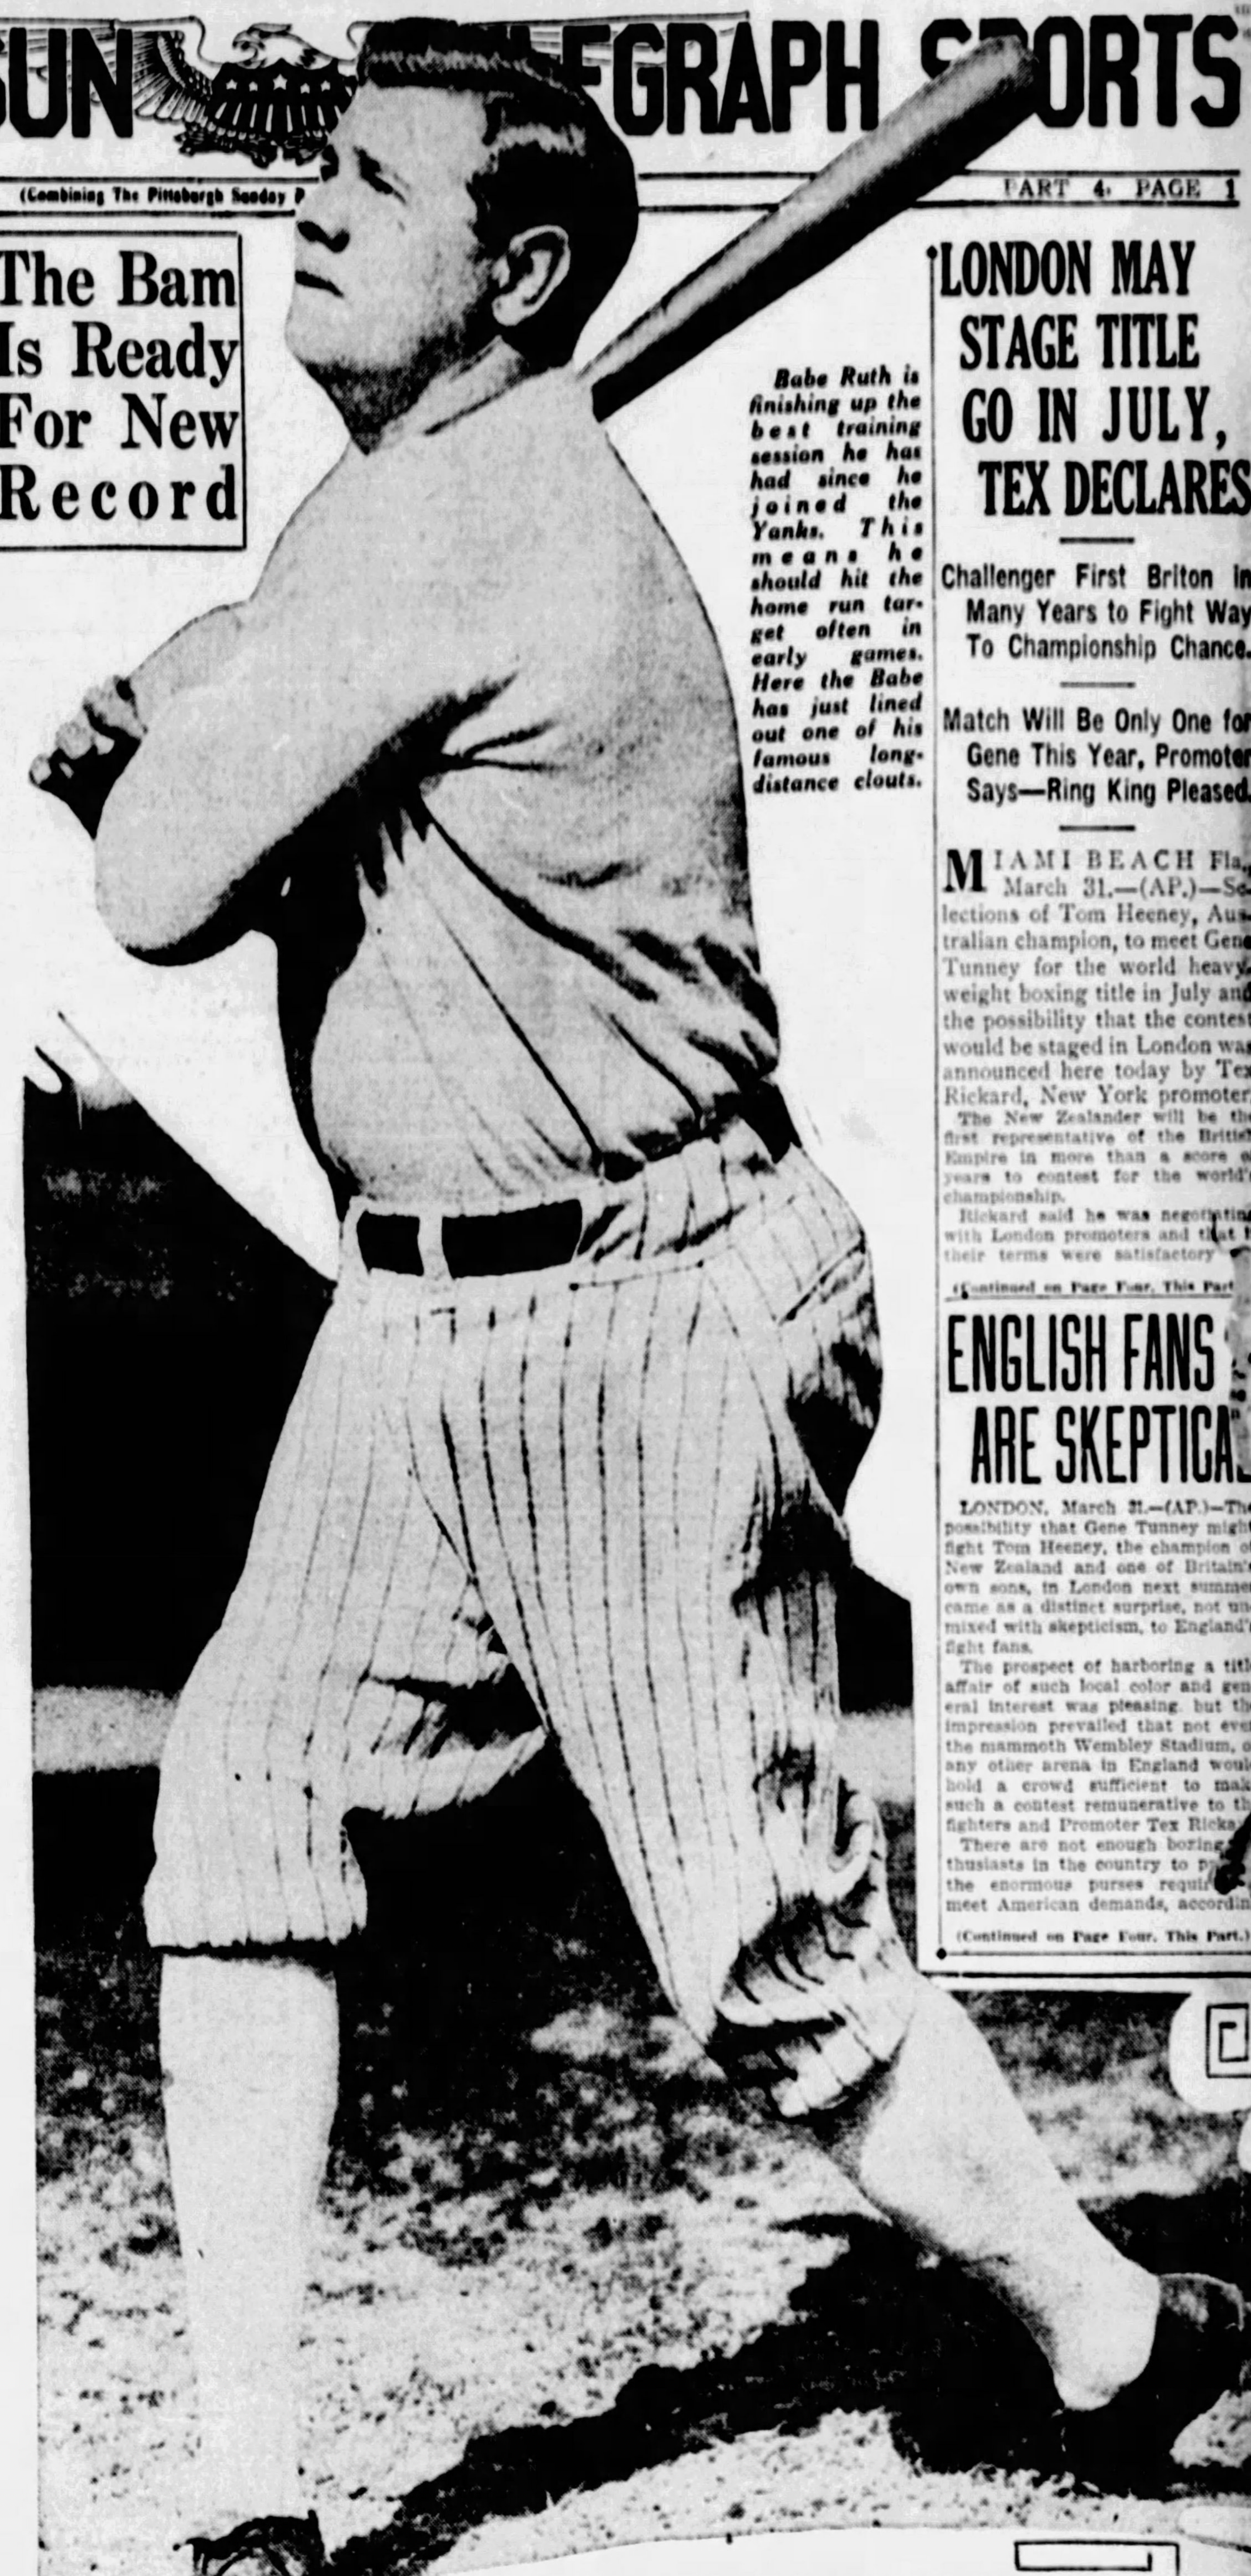
The Bam Is Ready For New Record



Babe Ruth is finishing up the best training session he has had since he joined the Yanks. This means he should hit the home run target often in early games. Here the Babe has just lined out one of his famous long-distance clouts.

TOUGH ON LOU—Were it not for the fact that Babe Ruth always manages to finish just a little ahead of his competition, Lou Gehrig would be the home run king of the major leagues. Last season he led the Babe for a goodly portion of the race, but found the going too tough and wound up with 47 homers against the Babe's new record of 60. Ruth's former mark was 59 circuit clouts in a season.

ENGLISH FANS ARE SKEPTICAL

LONDON, March 31.—(AP.)—The possibility that Gene Tunney might fight Tom Heeney, the champion of New Zealand and one of Britain's own sons, in London next summer came as a distinct surprise, not unmixed with skepticism, to England's fight fans.

The prospect of harboring a title affair of such local color and general interest was pleasing, but the impression prevailed that not even the mammoth Wembley Stadium, or any other arena in England would hold a crowd sufficient to make such a contest remunerative to the fighters and Promoter Tex Rickard.

There are not enough boxing enthusiasts in the country to pay the enormous purses required to meet American demands, according

Tawm's Not So Good, But 'E's the Best We've Got

By HARRY KECK, Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

THE Gene Tunney-Tom Heeney match, closed yesterday by Tex Rickard for July was the only bout remaining for the promoter as the result his series of elimination matches.

Heeney has beaten everybody he has boxed with the exception of Jack Sharkey, who held him to a draw in 12 rounds, and Johnny Risko, whom Heeney defeated at Detroit in January, later won over Sharkey.

Heeney isn't so much as a challenger—but he's the best we've got.

How about Dempsey? He is positively through. He may make an attempt to fight again, but he'll never again rate as an opponent for Tunney, who has beaten him twice.

As for the fight being staged in England, well, we'll see the boys doing their stuff at the Yankee Stadium or over in New Jersey. The English angle merely means that the ballyhoo has started.

What sort of a fight will Tunney vs. Heeney be? The same sort as Tunney vs. Dempsey, minus the Dempsey dynamite. A skilled boxer against a mauling fighter. An agile, alert ring general against a bull who keeps rushing—and taking it as he comes. It should be a pipe for the celebrated bookworm, permitting him to show at his boxing best.

PYLE RUNNERS IN DEAD HEAT

Gavuzzi and Payne Remain at Heels of Leader in Bunion Derby.

SANTA ROSA, N. M., March 31.—(AP.)—Finishing in a dead heat for first place, Peter Gavuzzi of Southampton, England, and Andrew Payne, Claremore, Okla., traveled the 46.4 miles from Palma to Santa Rosa in 7:00:20 in today's lap of the Los Angeles to New York footrace.

With Arne Souminen of Detroit holding first place in the race on the basis of elapsed time, Gavuzzi and Payne are staging a neck and neck race to overtake him. The English entry's time for the 1,004.1 miles covered is 172:03:26, and Payne's 172:27:37.

Souminen finished behind them today in 7:19:30. His elapsed time is 167:55:05. Harry Rea, Long Beach, Cal., finished after Souminen in today's run.

Bucs Announce Sale of Cronin To Kansas City

By CHARLES J. DOYLE, Sun-Tele Staff Correspondent.

LOS ANGELES, March 31.

THE Pittsburgh Pirates tonight announced the outright sale of Joe Cronin, utility infielder, to the Kansas City club of the American Association. The Pirates were unable to retain an option on Cronin's services as the baseball rules specify that a club cannot farm out a player more than twice. The Pirates farmed out Cronin to Johnstown in the Mid-Atlantic League in 1925 and to New Haven of the Eastern League in 1926. As a result his sale to Kansas City means that the Pirates, if they hope to regain his services, will have to repurchase him.

A promising hitter, but ragged in his fielding as a result of his eagerness to complete plays, Cronin was of little service to the Corsairs since 1925 when he joined the team immediately after leaving Sacred Heart College of San Francisco. The Pirates made several attempts to overcome Cronin's weakness in the field, but to no avail and his release at this time came as no surprise.

Cronin was born in San Francisco on October 12, 1906, and still makes his home in the Golden Gate city. He bats and throws right-handed, weighs 170 pounds and stands 5 feet 11 inches in height.

CELTICS TIE SWISSVALE, 2-2

Pittsburgh Celtics and the Union Switch and Signal elevens played the first exhibition game of the season Saturday for the benefit of the Olympic fund, and with a good crowd on hand battled to a 2-2 tie at Swissvale.

Both clubs used their best clubs, the Celtics taking this workout in preparation for the West Penn reopened tourney next Sunday. The field was in good condition and after 20 minutes Moir scored. Ten minutes from the interval McConnell tallied. In the second half both players duplicated their scores and the game finished in a deadlock. The lineup:

Swissvale—2.		Celtics—2.
Marshall	G.	Thompson
Clark	R. B.	Robinson
Brown	L. B.	C. Thompson
McStay	R. H.	Niblock
Murray	C. H.	Boylan
Doig	L. H.	McCully
R. Murray	O. R.	W. Thompson
Conners	I. R.	McConnell
Moir	C.	Lumsden
King	I. L.	Ramsey
Rutherford	O. L.	Fleming

Goal scores—Moir 2, McConnell 2. Score at half time—1-1. Time of halves—Two 45 minutes. Referee—O'Connor.

CHILLY SAUCE

BY CHILLY DOYLE

LOS ANGELES, March 31.—Ralston Hemsley faces an excellent opportunity. The kid catcher from the Ohio coal district has practically been selected as third-string catcher. Throughout the illness of Johnny Gooch, Rolly has been ready for emergency duty and once or twice he has worked with the regular team.

Hemsley has to show that he can hit to hold the job. His batting is a doubtful quantity. Hemsley batted better than 300 in the Blue Ridge League and he had a flock of home runs, but to date he has not been impressive at the plate. On the other hand, Hemsley, like other Hooligans, has not had much chance to show.

Following up his fine regard for Hemsley. Bush stated today he would start him against the Cubs in the third game of the series. Rolly worked so hard in the early days of camp he left a fine impression with Bush. The Pirate boss is quick to make decisions about players. Of course, a catcher is supposed to hit the ball consistently.

Speaking of catchers, the best receiver in the game, in the opinion of many critics, is taking a part in this series. The bouquet is meant for Charles Leo Hartnett, the strong-armed receiver of the Bruins. Every base runner in the league realizes that Charles Leo carries a gun, and when he is behind the bat the boys don't wander very far off the bases.

Hemsley was working out in a Yannigan uniform, but when he was informed he was to be the

KERR AND AMOS IN AUTO WRECK

WASHINGTON, Pa., March 31.—Head Coach Andy Kerr of the Washington and Jefferson football team and Bill Amos of this city, captain of last year's team, had a narrow escape from death and were severely bruised early this morning when Kerr's automobile, in which they were returning to Washington from Pittsburgh, overturned south of Pittsburgh.

The two football men had addressed a meeting of a men's class of the Mt. Lebanon United Presbyterian Church and been guests of honor at a banquet. They left the church at midnight in a sleet storm. When a short distance out of Mt. Lebanon, the car skidded and Kerr lost control, the machine sliding the road and overturning. Heidelberg Invades St. Louis in Quest of Title

OPEN forum on the much-mooted question as to whether Western Pennsylvania or St. Louis is the "hotbed" of American soccer will be held at St. Louis Sunday when Heidelberg, 1927 national amateur soccer champion and this district's representative in the Olympic tryouts, battles an all-star team of the St. Louis Municipal League for the championship of the West.

For many years soccer writers of the Mound City have proclaimed to the world that St. Louis is the hotbed of American soccer, and this statement, while never proven in the amateur code, stood the test in the professional end of the game until the advent of the American Professional League in the East.

Sunday's game will be the final tryout among the big time amateurs in the West, and the winner will probably stage a series of games with the winner of the eastern eliminations.

Last Sunday, St. Louis eliminated Chicago at St. Louis by a 2-1 score, and now it seems the best soccer town in the United States has the Olympic fever. This feeling is engendered by officials in public life who throw all their resources into the success of their team.

LOCALS FACE REAL FIGHT

Western Pennsylvanians, however, while not belittling the ability of our Missouri friends, have supreme confidence in the ability of that Green and Gold tornado from Heidelberg to whip anything in the country in the amateur code providing it gets an even break. And Heidelberg will know that it will be up against the very strongest fighting soccer combination it has ever faced, if past performances of St. Louis teams mean anything.

With the idea of copping the honors in team representation at the Olympic games, St. Louis started early in the fall to organize the team that will meet Heidelberg. The cream of the Municipal League was drafted for this team, a competent coach engaged, and games arranged with St. Louis professional league and out-of-town teams. All this with one idea in mind, that of getting a real combination together, and if reports are true, the team that defeated Chicago is a great outfit.

Opposed to this well-trained team is the best amateur soccer club in the United States and all American born. Heidelberg outclassed everything in the national amateur race last season, and the Green and Gold, spearheaded by Balsarini, have everything to gain in this battle, and West Penn will be pulling for them to riddle that Missouri defense just as it did the La Flamme last season in the national final.

HEIDELBERG CAPABLE

There is no question that it is a fighting outfit, starting at Courtley and finishing at Buff Donnelli. Three members of the team, Joe Fagan, Bill O'Donnell, and Dave Matthews, have seen action in St. Louis, so this experience will be nothing new to them.

On the other hand, the fans of the Mound City will probably enthuse over the Donnelli boys with

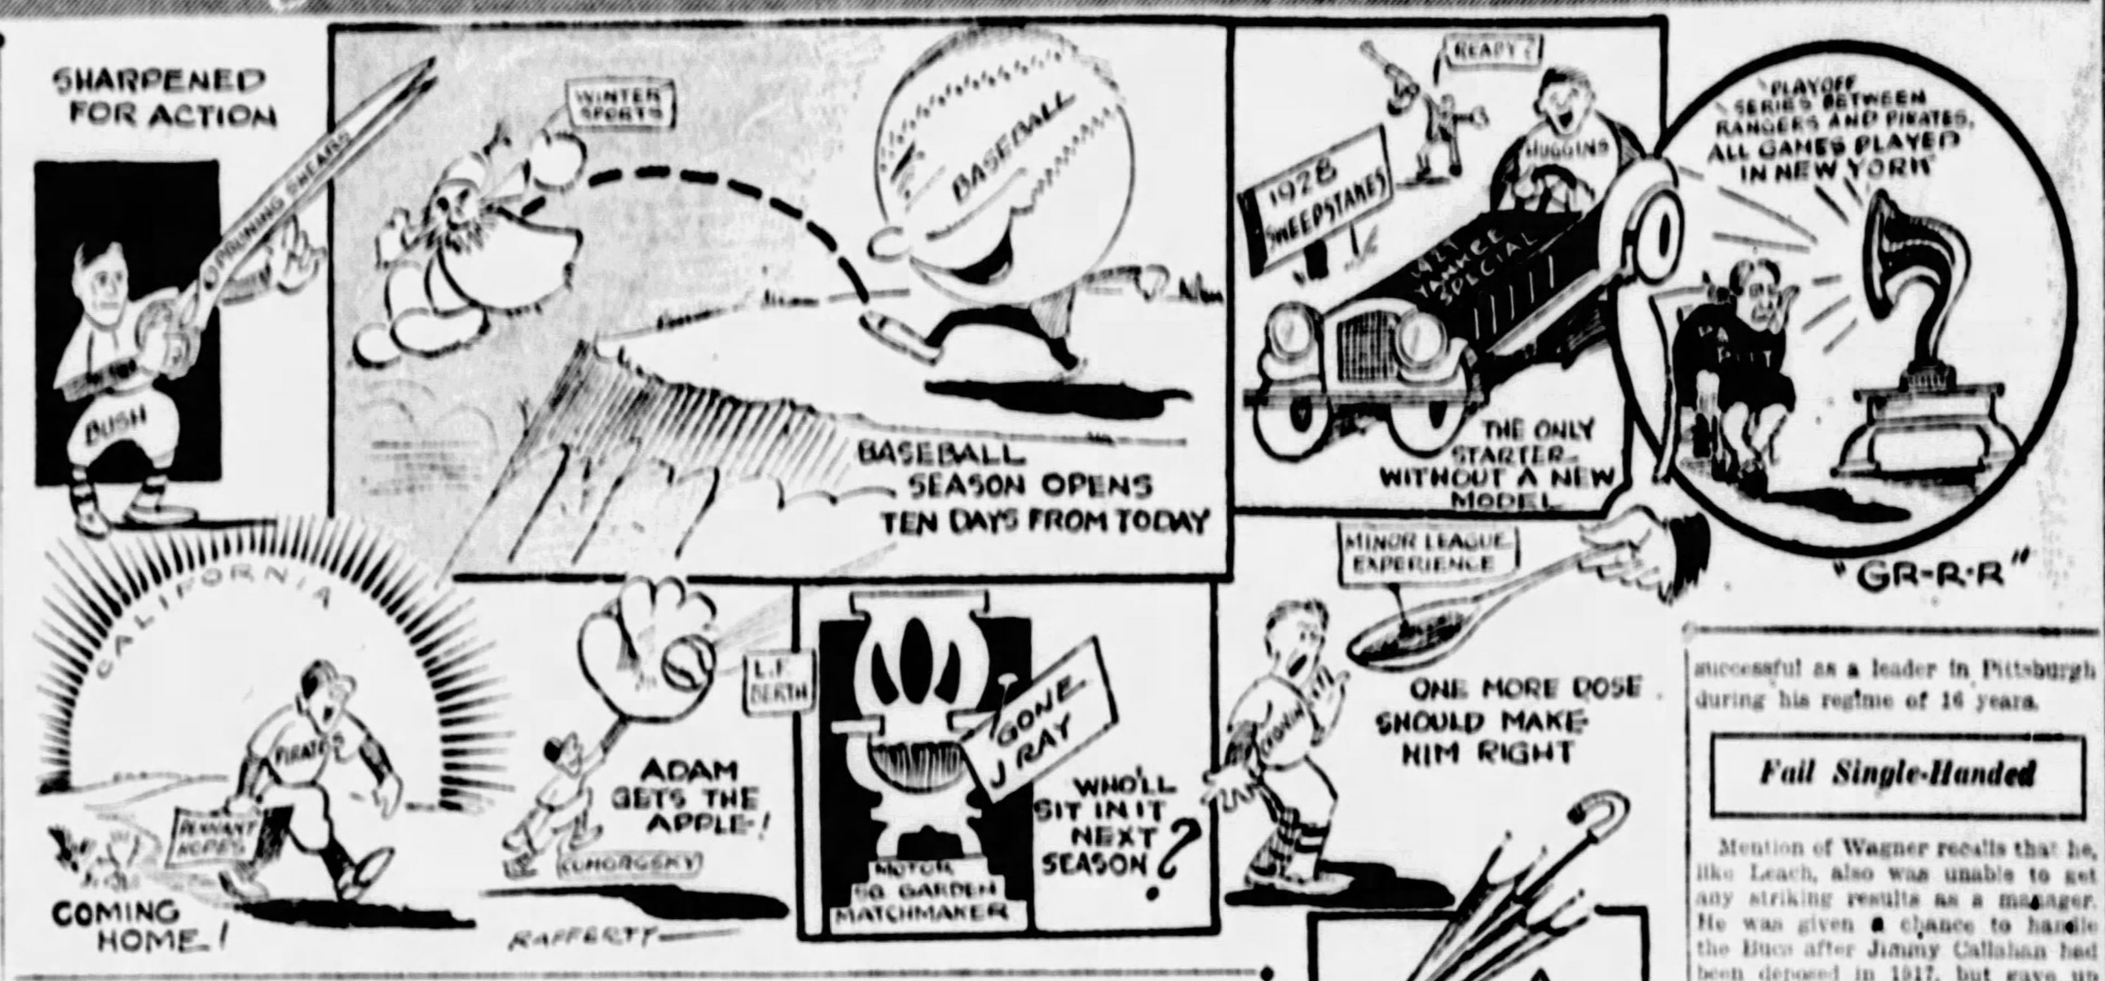
SPORTING REVIEW OF THE WEEK

No Real Clouds in Pittsburgh's Baseball Sky Despite Loss of Time in Training and Defeats at Hands of Minor Leaguers — Time Left for Club and Pitchers to Get in Shape for Opening of Season One Week From Next Wednesday—Joe Cronin's Release Does Not Come as a surprise—Yankees Only Club in Two Major Leagues to Start Season With 1927 Lineup—All the Other Clubs Show One or More Changes.

by JAMES J. LONG



WITH the Pittsburgh baseball club at the end of its stay in California and scheduled to play in Phoenix against the Cubs on Monday, the first stop on the eastward journey back to the scene of prospective pennant activities in National League territory, the followers of the Pirates here at home are wondering how near they will be to physical fitness when they go to the post in St. Louis one week from next Wednesday.

Much anxiety has been felt in some quarters because the Bucs were kept idle for five straight days by rain, and because they lost all but one of their games with the San Francisco club of the Pacific Coast League, but in reality there was no real cause for alarm.

It is pretty safe to anticipate that when the bell rings for the beginning of the big fight, the Freebooters will be in good enough shape to cope with any foe.

Defeats Mean Nothing

Those defeats at the hands of a minor league club are an experienced fan's idea of nothing to worry about. Such things are likely to happen at any time because the minor leaguers are hustling while the big time boys are carefully refraining from anything bordering on overexertion.

And in this case there were additional factors to explain the reverses of the Buccaneers, for not only was Manager Bush using the San Francisco games as a test to furnish a final line on his young pitchers, while resting his first-string men, but he instructed his infielders not to take any chances on an infield that was so rough that batted balls were likely to strike infielders in the faces or otherwise injure them.

The result of these instructions was that the Seals got base hits and subsequently runs on a lot of batted balls that ordinarily would have been fielded very easily.

Make Up Lost Time

Under average conditions the loss of five straight days of practice games and side work would be a serious matter. But in this instance the Pirates, with the exception of a couple who were held back by illness, had toiled so hard and steadily in Paso Robles that they were well advanced and could stand a loafing spell without losing the benefits they had gained through their earlier conditioning activities.

True, it held some of the veteran pitchers back to some extent, particularly Remy Kremer, whom illness prevented from starting a game until the opener of the present series with the Cubs last Thursday, but that doesn't mean that those flingers will not be in working shape by opening day.

Ten days remain to elapse before the Pirates will have to go into a real pennant game, and though the squad will be traveling during the greater part of that time the daily games and practice opportunities will afford them a good chance to make up for much of the lost time.

It must be remembered that the Pirates are not training for a contest that is to last only one day or one week, but for one that will extend over a period of six months. During every season each team is likely to have its share of hard luck under the law of average, and it is far better for the Pirates to have theirs before the season opens than after the flag fight is under way.

CRONIN GOES

ASIDE from the matter of condition, evidence has continued to pile up that Pittsburgh fans are warranted in looking upon their team as the best in the National League and a probable pennant repeater with a fair share of the season's breaks.

In the all-important matter of an infield, Manager Bush is more strongly fortified than any rival pilot. Not only has he the best regular infield in the National League in Grantham, Adams, Wright and Traynor, but he is also a step ahead of his competitors in secondary infield strength. That is, he is stronger in reserves.

In this connection, it is not surprising that the extra infielder to be dropped following the acquisition of Eddie Mulligan was Joe Cronin. Joe evidently is still suffering from his old fault of over-anxiety, judging from reports from the coast, and as Dick Bartell has come along fast and Mulligan was bought for the season, there was no room for Cronin.

Regret Joe's Leaving

The departure Saturday of Cronin from the Pittsburgh club will be regretted by local fans, as he has been a warm favorite here by reason of his fine spirit and clean habits, in which he may be termed a second Pie Traynor.

Joe can hit better than any of the other infield recruits the locals have had in recent years, but his inability to cure himself of his over anxiousness has led to his being discarded instead of Bartell, who is said to be steadiest in tight places and who appears to have the brightest kind of a future.

The shift to Kansas City may help Cronin, as he will have more of a chance to play and consequently more of a chance to settle down. He may come back one day a great ball player.

With Cronin left out of the reckoning, Manager Bush will have a powerful array with George Grantham and Joe Harris for first base, Sparky Adams and Bartell for second base and Glenn Wright, Traynor and Mulligan for the left side of the infield.

Strong Replacements

With these strong replacements the Bucs will be in a position to weather any occasional mishaps to the infield.

Mulligan is not a strong hitter, but he is a remarkable defensive player at either shortstop or third base, and if anything happens to put Wright or Traynor on the shelf temporarily, Eddie will be able to step in and keep the team going smoothly.

More than ever now it looks as if the third outfield job will go to Adam Comorosky at the start. Clyde Barnhart is a slow starter and may come along later at a hitting clip to force a change in the make-up of the outer garden, but right now Comorosky appears to have the job in his pocket.

Incidentally, instead of being merely the third man out there, Adam has actually been playing better ball than the two Waners. The Oklahoma brothers have not even approached their best form in the majority of practice games and it was not until he made four hits against the Cubs Thursday that Lloyd caused any commotion.

Thinking too much about vaudeville and not enough about baseball may be the cause of the Waners' poor spring showing. Probably it won't take Donie Bush long to change their line of thought.

Otherwise the team looks to be all set for a race that will bring another pennant to Pittsburgh. Haeffner and Linton have failed as catchers—Haeffner having been released already along with Pitcher Johnny Morrison and Third Baseman George Gottleber—but Smith looks to be due for one of the best years of his career, and Hemsley and Scott have given satisfaction during the illness of Gooch. Hemsley is pretty certain to be kept, and Scott is also sure of retention, but whether Scott will be carried as a catcher or as an outfielder will depend upon developments and the possibility of getting a seasoned backstop in a deal.

The pitching staff, made up of Miljus, Kremer, Hill, Meadows, Fussell, Brame, Grimes and Dawson, will leave little to be desired when it gets into working order.

MANY SHIFTS

FROM present indications the baseball season that will open one week from next Wednesday is going to be an outstanding one as a "make-over" year.

That is, it is going to be marked by many more changes in the line-ups of the various clubs than the average diamond campaigns.

True, there is a shifting, more or less, along the line every year. Each spring finds several clubs making alterations in their battle fronts.

That is a law of baseball, to some extent; the law that keeps the major leagues from being weakened and slowed down gradually to the point of eventual extinction.

For each year, it is found that some of the veteran players have reached the ends of their respective strings and outlived their usefulness, so that they must drop out and let the procession continue onward, with their places taken by new and younger players.

That's the old law of disintegration and renewal. Each club must lose some of its strength and replace it with new material from time to time until ultimately it is made over completely. There must be a constant infusion of new blood to keep the leagues up to their standards.

Only One Club Intact

But this year the changing or making-over process is the most general and extensive in years. An idea of its vast extent may be gained from the fact that among all the 16 clubs in the two major loops there is only one that will begin the 1928 season with the same lineup that it presented last year.

The solitary exception is the New York American League team. Unless Lazzeri's injury keeps him out of the opener the Yanks will start out with their same old regulars—Gehrig, Lazzeri, Koenig, Dugan, Ruth, Combs and Meusel. But every one of the other clubs has made one or more changes.

Players acquired since the close of the 1927 season who are practically certain of being awarded regular positions on their new teams at the beginning of the 1928 campaign or holdover players who have been shifted to different posts make quite a lengthy list.

Here are the outstanding probabilities at this time, with the Yankee club alone presenting no changes:

National League

Pittsburgh—Grantham, first base; Adams, second base; Comorosky, outfield (and this does not take into account the retention of Scott and Hemsley as catchers, Fussell and Brame as pitchers, and Bartell and Mulligan as infielders).

St. Louis—Holm, third base; Maranville, shortstop; indications being that Thevenow will not be able to start.

New York—Cohen, second base; Hogan, catcher; Welsh and O'Doul, outfield.

Chicago—Maguire, second base; Butler, third base; Cuyler, outfield.

Boston—Hornsby, second base; Bell, third base; Moore, outfield.

Cincinnati—Callaghan or Purdy, perhaps both, outfield.

Brooklyn—Bisonette, first base; Bancroft, shortstop; Riconda, third base; Bressler, outfield.

Philadelphia—Kelley, first base; Whitney, third base; Dietrich, outfield.

American League

Philadelphia—Hauser, first base; Hassler, shortstop; Speaker, outfield; Orwoll, place undecided.

Washington—Sisler, first base; Gillis, shortstop; West, outfield; Ganzel, outfield.

Detroit — Galloway, shortstop; Rice, outfield.

Cleveland—Morgan, outfield.

Boston—Williams, outfield; Taitt, outfield.

St. Louis—Blue, first base; Kress, infield; Brannon, infield; Manush, outfield; McNeely, outfield.

PILOT'S NEEDS

ANNOUNCEMENT that Tommy Leach, former Pirate star, is to be a manager in the Florida League again this season, heading the St. Petersburg club, draws attention again to the difference between bossing a team in a little league and directing one in a first-class minor circuit, not to mention a major loop.

As a pilot in the Florida League, Leach has been successful enough to hang on for several years, whereas when he had a chance to make a real managerial name for himself as skipper of the Rochester club in the Class AA International League, he speedily flivvered.

All of which brings up again the old question as to what is required to make a successful manager, and shows once more that in order to make his mark as a leader in even a fast minor league a man must have a great deal more than the reputation of having been a great ball player himself in his days of activity on the diamond.

Leach Looked Sure Bet

If ever there was a ball player who, on the surface and in the matter of baseball smartness, looked like a sure bet for managerial success in years to come, that player was Leach when he was starring for the Pirates, first at third base and later in the outfield.

There wasn't anything that Tommy couldn't do. He was the best third baseman of his time in the National League, later he was equally great as an outfielder, he could hit a ball with surprising power for a player of his small stature, and as a runner it is doubtful if there was a faster man in the game in his day.

Clarence Beaumont, also a former Pirate, was looked upon as a streak, but in a special match race at 100 yards at a Pirate field day in 1901 at Exposition Park, Leach beat him, though the margin was narrow.

The items cited above prove only, of course, that Leach was a great ball player, but on top of all the qualities that have been mentioned he had the one that made him look like one of the great managers of the future—smartness.

Tommy was one of the headiest players and quickest thinkers that ever held a job in the big leagues, and it was due in some measure to the fact that Manager Clarke had such wise lieutenants as Leach and Honus Wagner that Fred was so successful as a leader in Pittsburgh during his regime of 16 years.

Fail Single-Handed

Mention of Wagner recalls that he, like Leach, also was unable to get any striking results as a manager. He was given a chance to handle the Bucs after Jimmy Callahan had been deposed in 1917, but gave up after a couple of days.

There were three wonderful players—Clarke, Wagner and Leach. They were all .300 hitters, each good for the scoring of more than 100 runs in a season, and in addition each had brains and aggressiveness and knew the baseball book from cover to cover. It seemed that nothing could prevent either Leach or Wagner, particularly the former on account of his dash, from becoming a top notch manager.

Yet neither ever got anywhere, barring Leach's success in the thickets after failing in a big minor.

What was the reason? Why cannot a ball player who is admittedly great in all departments, who is as sharp in a baseball sense as the proverbial tack, and who has proved a wonderful lieutenant, be a success as leader on his own hook single-handed?

The answer is that great ball players do not always make great managers, and that it takes more than playing ability, more than smartness on the field and more than the qualities of a great lieutenant to make a successful pilot.

A lieutenant may be a poor general because he may not be able to show the same good judgment when he realizes that he will be held responsible for the failure of a move or of a play.

He may know the game, but be unable to handle a squad of 25 men of about as many different dispositions.

An obscure ball player may make a better manager than a star.

Lieutenants can be developed, but leaders must be born.

BOUT MAKERS

ONCE again the fight-goers of the Pittsburgh district see a change made in the match-making job at the city's leading boxing club.

When the indoor season that is now drawing to a close was opened last fall, Johnny McGarvey, who

Turpen Boosts Bowling Sport

That there are 25 per cent more active participants in bowling than in any other sport was the claim made by Raymond A. Turpen, chairman of the board of directors of the American Duckpin Congress, in a talk over station WCAE Saturday night. The great growth of bowling has come in the last four years, in which time 75 per cent of the organized leagues have been formed, according to Turpen.

R. A. Turpen

He said there are approximately 50,000 league bowlers in Allegheny county.

Turpen attributed much of the present-day popularity of bowling, and especially the duckpin game, to the taking up of the sport by members of the fair sex. Husbands and wives, brothers and sisters and sweethearts now find enjoyable recreation under the modern conditions surrounding the conduct of bowling alleys, he said, and he predicted a further great growth for the pastime.

Prof. Bill's Bedtime Story—By Paul O. Bower

YOUNGSTERS REPLACE VETS—With the exception of Bill Tilden, the United States Davis Cup hopes this year will hang on the shoulders of a new array of talent, all youngsters. As a result of recent trials conducted in the South, Tilden has selected John Hennessey, Wilmer Allison and Arnold Jones to replace the veterans, Billy Johnston, R. N. Williams, Francis Hunter and others, who competed for the honors in past seasons. The first round of the battle to regain the world team championship bowl will be staged against Mexico at Mexico City next Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Other promising young talent which will be heard from includes 16-year-old W. F. Coen, who is an alternate; Frank Shields, Johnny Doeg and George F. Lott, Jr. For the next four or five years these youngsters will occupy the roles once filled by the aforementioned veterans and Maurice McLoughlin, the celebrated California "Comet;" Vincent Richards, now a pro, and one or two other giants of the courts.

The friends of the Buccos, many of whom are former residents of Pittsburgh, were rather quiet until Wright blasted his double in the ninth. This wallop brought out much racket in the Pirate cheering section. Then when Traynor hit safely there was another outburst in the Pirate wing.

Benny Rubin, who made a big hit in Pittsburgh last summer through his theatrical appearances and radio talks, is in Los Angeles knocking 'em out of their seats.

The final game of the Series is set for tomorrow. If the sunny weather remains it is probable that a big crowd of fans will cheer the two clubs. Shortly after the game both clubs will say farewell to California as they entrain for Phoenix, Ariz. The two major league entries will stage a contest Monday at the home of George Grantham.

for the Bushwhackers. Percy pitched five hitless frames, beginning with the third. He yielded only six hits in the whole battle.

Miljus and Fred Fussell were impressive for the Buccos. Penn Avenue John was in a fine stride for five frames. Fussell worked three clever rounds before giving way for Pinch-hitter Clyde Barnhart. Walter Tauscher pitched the ninth frame and retired the Cubs in order.

The Dreyfuss constituents passed up a golden opportunity to tie up the clash in the ninth. Buckshot Wright opened the frame with a double to right and Capt. Traynor dropped a single in left that sent the shortstop to third. To show there was no fooling, Bush called for his reserve wrecking squad, but it did not function.

Traynor, meantime, had gone along to third on a passed ball. Pete Scott went up to swing for Grantham and that's exactly what Pete did. Scott was not cheated out of his swing, but Jones had a lot of stuff on the ball and he was able to fan his former team-mate.

Comorosky hit a weak roller to Elmer Yoter of the North Side and the sturdy little third-sacker flipped him out as Wright rode over. It was put up to Joe Harris to drive in Traynor from third, but Coulter Joe sent a fly to Cuyler to end the contest.

It was a dandy game in many respects. Yoter played a whirlwind defensive game for Joe McCarthy, the Pittsburgher taking care of five fine assists and a putout without a slip.

Boots Grantham turned in the banner play of the game in the seventh, his one-handed feature knocking off at least one run. With McMillan on third and Cuyler on first and two out, Wilson slammed a hot drive to the right of the first-sacker. George dove for the ball, and when it hit his glove the force of the impact threw him into a contortion. But George untangled himself and then beat Hack to the bag.

REDBIRD STOCK JUMPS AS ACE SHAKES INJURY

St. Louis Shortstop Handles Eight Chances Faultlessly, Hits Double and Single.

Bottomley Leads Attack With Four Safe Wallops, But Has Three Errors.

ATLANTA, Ga., March 31.—(AP.)—St. Louis Cardinal pennant hopes took a big jump today when Tommy Thevenow, star shortstop, who was injured last season, played his first game of the year and showed he was able to do his stuff.

The Cardinals won from Atlanta, 8 to 1. Thevenow handled everything faultlessly. He had eight chances, four assists and four putouts. In addition, Tommy hit a double and a single.

Jim Bottomley, Cardinal first sacker, hit a triple, a double and two singles in five times at bat, driving in three runs and scoring another himself, to offset his three errors, one of which was responsible for the lone Atlanta tally. Score by innings:

	R.	H.	E.
St. Louis	2	0	1
Atlanta	0	0	1

Batteries—Frankhouse, Rhem and O'Farrell, Mancuso; Dudley, Adcock and Brock.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 31.—(AP.)—The Giants ran their string of exhibition victories to seven today when they defeated the Memphis club of the Southern League by 12 to 1. Jim Faulkner and Hal Clarkson hurled for the Giants and were opposed by two former major league pitchers, Harry Kelly, ex-Senator, and Leo Dickerman, once of the Robins and Cardinals. The Giants collected 20 hits. The score by innings:

New York (N.)	12	20	2
Memphis (S. L.)	1	7	2

Batteries—Faulkner, Clarkson and Hogan; Kelly, Dickerman and Berger.

ROBINS WIN IN TENTH

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., March 31.—(AP.)—Henry Wertz held the Brooklyn Dodgers to two hits in five innings, but both of these were doubles in the tenth inning and the Dodgers took their fourth straight victory over the Boston Bedskins, 7 to 6, today. Harvey Hendrick opened the final inning with a double. Del Bissonette promptly sent him home with another two-base blow, and the game was over. The score by innings:

	R.	H.	E.
Boston (N.)	6	11	6
Brooklyn	7	10	1

Batteries—Genewich, Wertz and Taylor; Petty, Vance, Clark and Henline.

REDS DOWN NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 31.—(AP.)—The Cincinnati Reds, pulling ahead in the fourth inning when Pittinger singled and scored on Ford's double, defeated the Nashville team, 5 to 1, this afternoon in an exhibition game. Following the fourth inning they piled up a score steadily while the Vols labored in vain. The score by innings:

	R.	H.	E.
Cincinnati (N.)	5	9	1
Nashville (S. L.)	1	6	2

Batteries—Ruxey, Edwards and Hargreaves and Zuksforth; Allen, Simmons and Stauffer, Thompson.

IN THE TRAINING CAMPS

PHILADELPHIA, March 31.—(AP.)—The batting of Tris Speaker, making his debut here today as a member of the Philadelphia Athletics, helped his team defeat the Philadelphia Nationals, 6 to 3, in the first of a five-game inter-city series. Tris poled one to deep center in the seventh inning and Sammy Hale raced home ahead of him.

The Phillies brought the 18,000 spectators to their feet in the ninth inning with a two-run rally that ended when Cy Williams grounded to Joe Huser at first base for the final out. The score by innings.

	R.	H.	E.
Phila. Nats.	3	9	0
Phil. Amers.	6	7	2

Batteries—Ring, Benge and Wilson; Grove, Rommell and Cochrane.

SENATORS OUTSLUGGED

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 31.—(AP.)—Rallying in the seventh and eighth after spotting Washington five runs in the first two innings, the Birmingham Barons of the Southern Association made it two straight from the Senators today by a 10 to 8 score.

Joe Jenkins' triple with two on tied the score at eight-all in the seventh. A base on balls, Carroll's single, West's error and Bigelow's long sacrifice to deep right brought in the winning runs. The score by innings:

	R.	H.	E.
Wash'ton (A.L.)	10	13	1
Birm'ham (S.)	8	11	1

Batteries—Gaston, Jones and Tate; Roy Morrell and Jenkins.

CHISOX TOP SHREVEPORT

SHREVEPORT, La., March 31.—(AP.)—A four-run splurge in the tenth inning gave the Chicago White Sox a 5 to 4 victory over the Shreveport Sports today. It was the final exhibition game between the clubs.

Two walks, a hunt, combined with a double by Hunnefield and two infield hits brought in the winning runs. Ted Lyons, Sox hurling ace, was hit hard by the Sports in the seven innings he pitched. Williamson, who relieved him, held them without a run in

Hard Punchers Collide Again

SEEKS REVENGE— Rudy Ceder, Tarentum knockout artist, who meets Jack Katkish of Lawrenceville in a return bout in the Motor Square ring Monday night. He recently lost a decision to Katkish in the same ring in a bout featured by knockdowns on both sides.

WOULD REPEAT WIN— Jack Katkish, who is anxious to knock out Rudy Ceder in their battle in Motor Square ring Monday night. He just missed turning that trick in their first meeting, a few weeks ago, flooring Rudy three times. The winner this time has been promised a bout with Jack Zivic.

bout would be staged there. Otherwise, he declared, it will be fought out in the United States.

TUNNEY PLEASED

Tunney, who is here with Rickard on vacation, expressed satisfaction at the selection of Heeney as his opponent.

"I hope to be able to stage the match some time in July either in England or the United States," Rickard said. "I am now waiting for final word from London and if their terms are agreeable I shall take the match there. Wherever the contest is held it will be the only heavyweight championship match this year for it would be impossible to develop another contender this year to meet the winner of the July title contest."

"As Jack Dempsey no longer desires a return match, this will be the only championship contest that will be possible for me to engage in this year due to lack of suitable opponents," Tunney said.

"In selecting the Australian champion Rickard has in my opinion named the outstanding contender."

Harvey expressed confidence that his man would win the title and elation over the prospect of managing the first British Empire representative in 30 years to fight for the world's heavyweight championship.

MATCH O. K. IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP.)—The world championship match between Gene Tunney and Tom Heeney, announced at Miami Beach today by Tex Rickard, probably will take place in one of the two New York major league ball parks around July 4.

Matching of Heeney with the champion automatically shelves Johnny Risko, the Cleveland baker boy, who had fought his way up to the elimination finals with the New Zealander.

Chairman James A. Farley of the New York State Athletic Commission, told The Associated Press when informed of the match, that he could see no bar to staging the bout here.

"While I'd rather not discuss the matter until the commission meets on Tuesday, personally I see no objection to the match. Heeney is one of the three accredited challengers in New York State and apparently all the provisions of the board would be complied with if Rickard made this match," Farley said.

SCOUT LONDON SITE

The possibility of London as a site for the match has been considered by Rickard for some time, but experts generally have doubted that the bout would be taken abroad. John Mortimer, Harvey's British representative, has been studying the situation in London for some time and Heeney himself now is in England for a vacation but with the same purpose in mind.

Local information indicated that taxation on the purses and receipts of a match in London would be prohibitive. The principals also would be subject to income taxes

Heavy Socking Bee Seen In Katkish-Ceder Clash

By HARRY KECK,
Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

SOCK, sock, sock!

That's the music the fight fans like to hear, and that's the tune that should be played in the Motor Square Garden ring Monday night, when Rudy Ceder and Jack Katkish hook up in their return bout over the eight-round route in the windup. A few weeks ago the same pair clashed in the same ring and put on a miniature Dempsey-Firpo slaughter. Ceder dazed Katkish in the opening round and was floored three times later and arose from one of the knockdowns to drop his opponent for a count of eight. The fans have been yelling for a return battle ever since, and now they have it.

Tommy Freeman.

They also have another eight-rounder, between Jack McFarland of Wilkinsburg, who has been fighting in California and Canada during his long absence from local rings, and Joe Elrene of the North Side, featherweights, and two six-rounders and a four-rounder.

Young Rudy, popular lightweight of Charleroi, and Sig Keppen of Beaver Falls, who boxes windups in many cities, will furnish the main six-round preliminary, and the other six-round event will introduce Joe Louder of the South Hills, a Pennsylvania Railroad boxing star, against Jack Unglo, Etna 140-pounder. Two newcomers, Tony Azarra of the East End and Eddie Schuster of Sharpsburg, will box the four-round curtain-raiser, a new stunt here.

LITTLE WASHINGTON SHOW

Washington, Pa., has its third show of the season scheduled for Monday night, with Teddy Welch, of McKeesport, meeting Battling Spinello, Charley Luck's new welterweight, in the 10-round windup. Three six-round prelims are carded as follows: Banty Reihner, of Little Washington, vs. Happy Davis, of Pittsburgh; Louis Posito, of Bellaire, O., vs. Jack Griffith, of Pittsburgh, and Eatem Giles, of Little Washington, vs. Dan O'Banyan, of Clairton. The show will be staged in the Washington Gardens.

The newest heavyweight sensation is K. O. Christner, of Akron, who knocked out Sergt. Jack Adams, of Chicago, in the first round the other night. He recently stopped Johnny Urban and has beaten other promising opponents in decisive fashion. He looks so good that he has been permitted to enter the heavyweight eliminations to be sponsored by Humbert Fugazy and Jim Mullen in New York and Chicago.

FREEMAN STOPS HARMON

Willie Harmon's knockout defeat in three rounds by Tommy Freeman at Cleveland last week was unexpected, to say the least. Harmon, who has beaten Young Saylor, Jack Zivic and Cuddy DeMarco here this season, has been going in his best form recently, while Freeman has been on the sidelines for some time and never has been rated as a heavy puncher, although he stands out as a clever boxer and a hard one to beat.

Connecticut has been added to the list of states which bar draw decisions. Pennsylvania might well follow suit. There is no sane reason why all bouts should not be to win and lose decisions. The rule prevents buck-passing by the officials.

Week's Ring Card

MONDAY

Rudy Ceder vs. Jack Katkish and Jack McFarland vs. Joe Elrene, 8 rounds each; Young Rudy vs. Sig Keppen and Joe Louder vs. Jack Unglo, 6 rounds each; Tony Azarra vs. Eddie Schuster, 4 rounds, Motor Square Garden.

Teddy Welch vs. Battling Spinello, 10 rounds; Happy Davis vs. Banty Reihner, Jack Griffith vs. Louis Posito, Eatem Giles vs. Dan O'Banyan, 6 rounds each, Washington Gardens, Washington, Pa.

Roberto Roberti vs. Ted Sandwina, Roy Mitchell vs. Nando Tassi and Ernie Schaaf vs. Benny Touchstone, 10 rounds each; Hambone Kelly vs. Jack Stone and Rocky Stone vs. Cy Harris, 8 rounds each, Boston.

Henry LaMar vs. Tex McEwan, 10 rounds, Manchester, N. H.

Pete Latzo vs. Harold Mays, 10 rounds, New York.

Jack Horner vs. Harry Marton, 10 rounds, Jersey City.

TUESDAY

Joey Kaufman vs. Bruce Flowers, 10 rounds, New Haven.

WEDNESDAY

Tod Morgan vs. Jack Duffy, 10 rounds, Toledo.

FRIDAY

Louis Colombo vs. Mickey Milton, 10 rounds, Clarksburg, W. Va.

Entries close Monday night of next week for the A. M. A. senior championships, to be held in Motor Square Garden, Friday and Saturday nights of next week, under the auspices of Islam Grotto, M. O. V. P. E. R., which recently staged the junior championships. The winners will represent Pittsburgh in the national championships at Boston, April 22-24, which will be the official tryouts for the Olympic Games boxing team.

PIAZZI IN BOUT

Young Piazzi of Mt. Washington has been signed for an eight-round main bout with Harry Taylor at East Liverpool, O., Monday night of next week.

Solly Snyder of Boston writes that the boxer who was knocked out at Davenport, Iowa, recently under the name of Homer Robertson wasn't his Homer—the former Pittsburgher—at all, but an impostor.

Joe Colombo of Clarksburg, who is fighting his way through the University of Louisville, boxes Mickey Milton of Clarksburg in a 10-round windup at Clarksburg next Friday night.

to the general opinion. The British income tax and entertainment tax would reduce considerably whatever receipts might be obtained.

Fans recalled that the most interesting international affair of this kind ever staged in England was a bout between Tom Gibbons and Jack Bloomfield, British light-heavyweight champion, at Wembley Stadium in August, 1924. The match was a financial failure, entailing a loss to the promoters of approximately $60,000.

Gibbons received only $12,000 of the $50,000 he had been guaranteed. Bloomfield probably received nothing for his services.

Rickard has guaranteed Tunney alone $525,000 for his 1928 title defense.

There is some talk of matching Emanuel with Mickey Walker, the middleweight champion, managed by Jack Kearns, Dempsey's former pilot, from whom he is estranged.

WEEK'S SPORT REVIEW

By JAMES J. LONG

had been matchmaker at Motor Square Garden for several years, tendered his resignation, and the place was given to Johnny Ray, former local lightweight boxer.

Last week, with the end of the present season almost at hand, Ray himself was relieved of his duties, and Manager John L. Hernon took over the match-making role for the remainder of the campaign, which is to end two weeks from tomorrow night, meaning that there will be only two more shows before the indoor season closes here, as the Garden will not offer a boxing card on Easter Monday.

When next season rolls around Hernon may stay on the job with an assistant or put another man in his place. Plans are still unshaped.

Many in Past

The recent changes in this important position at the city's leading boxing club will cause the older followers of the glove game here to recall some of the more notable matchmakers among the many who have appeared in that role here in the past.

Thirty years ago Billy Corcoran was promoting shows and making his own matches on a scale that enabled Pittsburgh fans to see some of the best fighters in the country in action.

Joe Gans, Rube Ferns, Matty Matthews, Joe Walcott, Jack Blackburn and others were among those he brought here.

Later he showed Sam Langford, Kid Cotton (whom he developed), Klondike, Al Kubiak and others.

Red Mason kept the game going in this neighborhood for years. Even when boxing was not permitted in the city he held shows in the suburbs and made scores of matches in which his own fighters met outsiders, such as Tim Callahan, Tim Kearns, Harry Forbes, George Kerwin and the South African Cyclone, who died following a knockout in a bout with John Cavanaugh.

Roy Schooley started to do the matchmaking for the Southern Club at Old City Hall when boxing was revived in Pittsburgh during the sesqui-centennial celebration.

Tom Bodkin and Willie Price did the pairing of boxers there for a time later, when weekly shows were held on Saturday nights.

Schooley then became matchmaker and promoter at Duquesne Garden and put on the bout between Stanley Ketchel and Frank Klaus, which drew the biggest local gate up to that time, $12,000. It was a loser at that, as the promoters had taken the big gamble of paying 75 per cent of the gross receipts to Ketchel and Klaus and 15 per cent for rent, leaving only 10 per cent for all other expenses.

Routley's Big Stuff

Boxing rose to its hightest peak here when the Keystone club was organized to promote big indoor and outdoor shows and when James E. Routley was made matchmaker.

Routley went right after the best stuff in the market and gave some of the Pittsburgh fans the classiest fighters they had ever seen, including Tom and Mike Gibbons, Bill Brennan, Benny Leonard, Johnny Tillman, Kid Williams, Billy Miske, Kid Norfolk, Jack Dillon, Battling Levinsky and countless others.

Meanwhile numerous other men had been taking a hand at the matchmaking game here. Jimmy Dime did the work at Duquesne Garden for a time, and among those that he brought in was Jack Jonson for a bout with Tony Ross.

Mike McNamara matched Jack Bennett and George Plante for a bout in a tent in the Williamsburg portion of the South Side, and also held several other shows.

Prof. Evans won considerable prominence here for a time as a promoter and match-maker.

Rich Holland, with his brother as partner, operated in the South Side Market House for a while. Johnny Jones also was a South Side matchmaker, Danny Donovan was one of several who were active in Lawrenceville, and George Jaffee took a hand for a brief period, his top offering being the showing of Georges Carpentier in an exhibition bout.

EXIT-HOCKEY

NOW that the Pirates are out of the National Hockey League play-offs—having been eliminated by the Rangers and have said goodby to Pittsburgh — local fans are wondering just what is in store for them next winter. They are sure that Odie Cleghorn and his crew will not be back at Duquesne Garden, but there are rumors afloat that a minor league outfit will be seen in action here next winter.

Cleveland appears certain to get the Pirate franchise and whatever players the new owners wish to sign.

Every player, except Johnny McKinnon, will have to sign a new contract, McKinnon having one more year before his three-year document expires.

In spite of the great uphill battle staged by Cleghorn's colts and their getting into the post-season series, there are at least two and possibly three players who are not likely to be tendered new contracts.

Milks, Darragh, Worters, Drury, McCaffrey and Cotton are the men certain to be retained by the new owners. McCurry will not leave the city no matter where the team goes, as he intends finishing his dental course at Pitt next year and should there be no hockey here the popular duke will hang up his skates indefinitely.

Cleghorn Pilot

Cleghorn likely will be retained as manager. It is understood that a Cleveland man, said to be one of the prospective new owners, was in Pittsburgh recently and held a conference with the dapper pilot. Whether or not their confab had to do with a contract could not be learned.

Today and tomorrow the majority of the Pirates will leave for their homes in Canada, McCaffrey and McKennon left Saturday.

Cleghorn and his skaters arrived home from New York Friday and yesterday the puckmen were busily engaged packing trunks and making ready for the grand exit.

Drury, Smith and McCurry, the first named two being residents, will remain until next winter at least.

Should Pittsburgh be without hockey next winter it will be the first time in eight years that the popular winter sport has not been played here.

In 1919, under the management of Bill Martin, the old P. A. A. club had to disband after playing a couple games due to the suspension of Drury, who was barred from playing in America and Canada on a "tourist player" charge.

Drury Lone Survivor

The fans refused to patronize the sport with Drury out and rather than face a big deficit the management canceled all games.

And incidentally Drury is the only player of the old P. A. A. sextet still wearing a Pittsburgh uniform, and one of the two or three still playing. Joe McCormick and Eddie Gorman are the only other P. A. A. puckmen still active as far as is known, Joe being a member of the Kansas City club in the American Association, while Eddie is with the Reginas in the Canadian Professional League.

Dinny Manners, Dink Madden, Stubby Baker, Eddie Nagle, Silver McCrimmon, Ray Bonney, Larry McCormick, Paddy Fuller, Paddy Sullivan, Terry McGovern, forme[r] P. A. A. idols, all have laid as[ide] their skates.

Bill Cameron, when last heard [of] was out of a hockey job.

During the Pirates' three years [in] the professional circuit they finis[hed] twice in the money, but on each [oc]casion were eliminated in the [first] round. Last winter they finis[hed] fourth.

But the Garrison finish [that] brought them from last place [in] mid-season to a playoff berth [this] season will long be remembered [by] the home folk.

Fay Keiser to Return To Box O. K. Yutz[y]

CUMBERLAND, Md., March 31.—Fay Keiser, veteran boxer of this city, who met Harry Greb on a number of occasions and was the conqueror of Bob Martin at the Fifth Regiment Armory of Baltimore, and K. O. Yutzy, local welterweight, are to fight at the State Armory here Friday, April 13, on winner take-all basis. Several days ago Keiser challenged Yutzy after the latter had defeated Buster Reed of Mount Savage, Keiser's protege, and now Yutzy has signed with Promoter Vic Ricker to meet Fay.

Keiser, who weighs about 168 pounds, is to train down to 158, Yutzy will come in around 147. Keiser met Yutzy four years ago in an open-air bout at the Mid-City stadium and won with plenty to spare, flooring Yutzy twice during the 12 rounds.

New Alland Field Club's Sports Program Extensive

Golf, polo, swimming, indoor tennis, trapshooting and cricket are the sports likely to derive the greatest benefits from the construction of the new Alland Field Club, at Murrysville, 13 miles east of Pittsburgh on the William Penn Highway. These branches of athletic activity, which enjoy great popularity in the majority of America's metropolitan centers, have, with the exception of golf, been curtailed here by a lack of adequate facilities, but this situation is certain to be remedied when the formal opening at Alland is observed in July.

Two years ago an attempt to revive polo as a competitive sport in the Pittsburgh district was made by United States Army men stationed here. In addition to the Army men, many civilian riders became interested, and a small league was formed. All matches were played indoors during the winter months, and although the league enjoyed wide popularity the matches were discontinued in the spring because of the lack of a suitable outdoor field. At Alland a polo field approaching perfection is to be provided, and it is likely that the local polo league will be reorganized as soon as it is available to play. Army men in the Pittsburgh district already have made inquiry as to the possibility of organizing a polo circuit with Alland as the playing site, according to L. W McIntire, of 706 Penn avenue, president of the Alland board of trustees, and it is expected that within a few months polo will achieve a popu-

SANDLOT BASEBALL by TOM BIRKS

WITH the second and final meeting of the Allegheny County Baseball League being held Friday, organization plans in the district are practically finished. Most of the managers are sanguine regarding the possibilities this season, the dropping of the County League to a four-club circuit is viewed with alarm by sandlot critics in the district.

The barring of the Green Cab entry, which copped the pennant of the loop in 1926, might not have been the best move in the world when one stops to consider every angle of the case. The present line-up of the Cabbies, as given to this column, is not any stronger than at least two of the County League clubs of last season, and in view of the fact that all of the managers are eager to book Paul Houston's club on the independent circuit, it is peculiar that they would not meet them in the league.

The sentiment that led to the barring of the Green Cab entry was the fact that the other clubs would be outclassed when the roster of Danny Moore was announced. But it is also an assured fact that no club in the district wants to be outclassed any more in an independent game than it does in the league battles. But the County League is a four-club circuit and the Cabbies will have to fight for a place in the limelight by bringing the best clubs in the tri-state district to Pittsburgh, and that should draw the crowds.

At the Homewood - Brushton boosters' meeting recently, there was quite a sentiment for the home talent idea in the makeup of the club this season, but to date the idea has not taken hold with the leaders of the club, and the men that make the financing of the club possible. Neither Homewood nor any other community would support a losing club even if all the players were born on Homewood avenue, and the fans will demand the best no matter where the wearers of the Homewood uniforms hail from.

The players of the Duellels will be measured for their uniforms Sunday at 2:30, following which the first practice game of the season will be staged. The club will be a member of the Metropolitan League this season and expects to have one of the best clubs ever to represent Greenfield on the diamond.

PILOTS TEST MATERIAL IN SUNDAY GAMES

Reorganization of Mon-Yough Circuit Still in Doubt; City League to Be Strong.

Umpires' Fight, Resulting in Two Groups, Holds Interest of Diamond Fans.

By TOM BIRKS.

THE first practice games of the season on local sandlots are scheduled for Sunday, weather permitting, and with opening day only two weeks away, quite a number of sandlot managers will start weeding out all the undesirables that are more than willing to sign on the dotted line for the season's long grind.

Practically all the organization plans for the leagues in this district are completed. There is some talk of an effort being made to bring back to life the Mon Yough circuit, but unless that mentor up at West Newton can be induced to enter a club the drawing power of the Mon-Yough circuit would be nothing to enthuse over.

The interest of many sandlotters has been centered in the umpires' situation, and just what the presence of two strong organizations in the district will lead to is a question. Evidently the organizations are not going to start a cut-throat policy, but intend to stand by the rates agreed upon before the split came. So managers need not get alarmed, for they are not going to get any umpires for just paying the carfare this season.

The City League is still keeping in the limelight as the most advanced baseball circuit in the district. Sponsoring the eight clubs in that loop are some of the keenest handlot managers in the district, who know the value of publicity and take advantage of all they can get to further the league they are putting over.

Burke Wins North-South Tourney; Mehlhorn Trails

PINEHURST, N. C., March 31.—(AP.)—Starting the final round with a seven-stroke lead, Billy Burke, young professional of New York, who first began tournament golf two years ago, became the United North and South open golf champion, with a 73-69-74-75—291 for the 72 holes of medal play.

Although his wide margin looked none too safe for a time during the final round, the former caddy master, finding his putts a little hesitant in flickering into the cup, pulled himself together and finished the final nine with a steadiness that made par look easy.

He was never in serious trouble during the tournament, his long drives carrying him well past bunkers and his approaches dropping consistently either on or near the greens.

His card:

Out ..... 5 5 4 4 4 4 3 6 3—38
In ..... 4 4 4 4 3 5 4 5—37—75

Nearest to him at the finish was Tommy Armour of Washington, national open champion, who had a 73-223—296. Johnny Farrell, winner of the recent $15,000 Miami Beach open, was next at 73-224—297 and Tommy Harmon of New York fourth with 76-223—299.

CRUICKSHANK FIFTH

Bobby Cruickshank of New York, who lost his North and South title after holding it two straight years, was fifth with 76-225—301.

Al Espinosa, Chicago, with a card of 77-226—303, finished in a tie for sixth place, with Henry Ciuci of New York and Bridgeport, Conn, who had 74-229—303.

Most of the participants leave here at once for the Richmond open which starts Tuesday.

Other low scores included:

Clarence Hackney, Atlantic City, 77-227—304; Tony Manero, New York, 80-228—308; Bill Mehlhorn, Pittsburgh, 77-232—309; J. C. Schorr, Bluefield, W. Va., 79-232—311; Al Ciuci, New York, 79-234—313; Eddie Held, New York, 83-230—313; Jack Cuttle, Garden City, N. Y., 78-237—315; James Dante, Madison, N. J., 78-237—315; Charles McAndrews, Laconia, N. H., 78-237—315.

MISS COLLETT MEDALIST

PINEHURST, N. C., March 31.—Acting as the pacemaker for the 108 women players who took part in the qualifying round of the twenty-sixth annual North and South Women's Championship, Miss Glenna Collett of Providence, the defending champion, won the qualifying medal for the third consecutive year with a round of 39-40-79, coming within two strokes of her own record for the No. 3 course, a 77 which she made in 1926, to win the medal.

Miss Collett finished her round with a birdie 3 at the home hole when she holed a 10-foot putt and this one shot proved to be the deciding issue as to whether medal would go to her, or be disputed for by Miss Virginia Van Wie of Chicago. The Chicago girl was 41-39-80.

The 16 qualifiers who made up the championship division comprised the best field that has ever competed in this tournament for several prominent players found themselves on the outer edge of the select when the division was made up. The championship division:

Miss Glenna Collett, Providence, R. I., 39-40—79 fought battle and was witnessed by close to 13,500 wildly enthusiastic fans.

Two major and 20 minor penalties were meted out by the officials during the fray, which, while of a close-checking nature, provided enough open hockey to make the game a brilliant spectacle. The penalties, however, played a major part in the game as three of the four goals were counted while the team scored against was short handed.

Phillips and Leduc drew the major penalties in the third period for using their sticks on each other when the Maroon sub center was attempting to crash through the Red Shirts' defense.

FAIL TO HOLD LEAD

In territorial play an advantage could be conceded to the Canucks, but they could not capitalize owing to the brand of goal tending produced by the veteran Benedict between the Maroon posts.

At one time during the second period the Canadiens held a 2-to-0 lead by virtue of a goal by Leduc in the first period, and one by Gagne in the second frame. Leduc scored on a pass from Gagne when the Montreal Maroons were short two men. Gagne's goal was scored on a pass from Gardiner early in the middle frame on a rink-wide pass from the veteran defenseman, Herb Gardiner.

Ten minutes after Gagne's goal, the Maroons took advantage of a series of penalties to the Canucks and rushed in two quick goals to tie the score. The Canadiens were two short at the time. Ward scored the first on a pass from Munro, while Smith got the tying counter 10 seconds later when he rushed in alone to beat the unprotected Hainsworth.

The third session was scoreless, although both teams had their opportunities. The lineup:

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 31.—(AP.)—The New York Yankees today found somebody they could beat. After dropping nine of their first 10 exhibition games, the Champions eked out a 2 to 1 victory over the Jacksonville Tars here.

Babe Ruth's single with two men on base in the third turned the trick. The Babe also got a double that went to waste when his mates failed to come through.

George Pipgras and Al Shealey allowed only five hits and fanned 10 men, George getting six of them. The Yanks made only seven hits off Bates and Chief McBee. The latter got both Ruth and Gehrig on strikes in the eighth inning. The score by innings:

PELICANS BEAT INDIANS

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 31.—(AP.)—New Orleans' Pelicans of the Southern Association hit in four runs in the ninth inning against the Cleveland Indians and won, 6 to 1, in the ninth game of their series today.

George Uhl's failure to keep men off the bases and the light hitting of his mates were responsible for the outcome. Jamieson and Summa, Indian outfielders, divided four of Cleveland's five hits between them, and Uhl got the other. Emil Levsen was the goat of the last inning rally. TARTANS AIM AT FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Pitt's Annual Interscholastic Swimming Meet Carded April 13 and 14.

Carlson, Tutor of Great Panther Quint, to Instruct Coaches at Summer School

By JESS CARVER.

AT THE risk of calling down the righteous wrath of Wally Steffen on their heads, enthusiastic followers of Tartan and Carnegie Tech are proclaiming from the skies that they are going to have a great football team over which to enthuse this fall.

Walter Steffen

Spring practice at Tech will begin April 10, the day after the Easter vacation comes to a close. Tartan football men, in checking over the list of players who may be expected to turn out for the spring grid drills, were assuredly far from tears as they jotted down the following names, in addition to a flock of freshman stars of brightest hue: Capt. Howard Harpster, Letzelter, Moorehead, Stauffer and Kennedy, backs; Kousman, Shaughency and Sweet, ends; Lovewell, Meilziner, Yerina, Schmidt and Nullally, linemen.

And to this list was added the name of Joe Herbst, star of the 1926 frosh eleven, who was unable to play varsity ball last fall.

With such an array of returning varsity men, nine of whom have had more or less experience, and with freshmen of the caliber and ability of Netherland, Karcis, Hilty, Eyth, Rosenweig, the Flannigans, Highberger and Dreshar, the Tartans can certainly face the future with a minimum amount of misgiving.

There is just this to be remembered—every freshman star does not of necessity develope into a varsity star.

HARPSTER REAL STAR

The Tartans have in the person of Howard Harpster, captain and quarterback, a fine bet for all-America honors. He is easily one of the smartest football players in the district, possible one of the best in the land. Harp is not noted as a ball carrier, though he can tote the pigskin with aplomb, but he is noted as a drop kicker and punter. (See Notre Dame files, sec. 45—volume 16, column 4.)

Howard Harpster

Harp has many amazing displays of heady football, and of game football. He is never as cool as when under severe fire—and usually goes best when the going is the toughest.

He and his team face a tough schedule this year—the latter part of which would prove the ability of most any college team. After three warm-up games with Westminster, Thiel and Ashland, the Tartans face Wash-Jeff, Pitt, Georgetown, Notre Dame and New York University in a row.

PITT MEET HELD APRIL 13-14

The fourteenth annual interscholastic swimming championships staged under the auspices of the University of Pittsburgh will be run, or swum, off April 13 and 14, in the Trees Gym pool.

The program for this meet is a fine one, splendidly arranged by Coach Pat Corr and varsity swimming manager J. J. Rosenberg. Entries will close Saturday. There are seven individual events on the two-day program, in addition to three relay races. The program follows: 40-yard free style, 100-yard back-stroke, 220-yard free style, 100-yard breast-stroke, 100-yard free style and the fancy dive, 160- and 120-yard medley relay, junior high school and a 160-yard relay for senior high schools.

CARLSON TO INSTRUCT

Several hundred college and high school coaches of the country will gather at Superior, Wisconsin, July 16 to 28, to learn the famous Carlson system of basketball under the guidance of the doctor, whose Pitt quintet clinched the national championship by winning 21 consecutive games during the past season.

Authorities of the Superior State Teachers' College have invited Dr. Carlson to instruct in basketball at the annual Superior summer coaching course. Coaches Bill Roper of Princeton and Howard Jones of Southern California will teach football. They will be assisted by Pipal of Occidental and Dr. Clarence Spears of Minnesota, former West Virginia mentor.

The Superior summer coaching course has been handled in past years by Knute Rockne, Pop Warner, Dr. Meanwell and Dr. Forrest (Phog) Allen, of Kansas.

Marathon Race For Indians to Feature Relays

ASIDE from the hundreds of university, college, and high school athletes who will compete in the sixth annual Kansas relays at the University of Kansas Memorial stadium, April 21, there will be several other feature events.

One of the features attracting unusual interest is the international Indian marathon race in which it is planned that three long distance Indian runners representing Mexico, the United States and Canada, shall compete for each country. The distance in this race is to be the regulation marathon distance of 26 miles, 385 yards and will be run from East Topeka to the University of Kansas stadium track where the finish will be made before the crowd assembled for the relays proper.

SANDLOT NOTES

The Morris and Bailey Club of the Mon-Yough League last season has been reorganized. Ralph Musser will manage the outfit, with Al Curley acting as business manager and treasurer. Quite a number of star players from the Glassport district have been signed, and the management is trying to sign Speed Walton to coach the club. Teams wishing to book the Clairton outfit should call Clairton 272-R in the evenings.

Manager Posey has scheduled a practice session for the Homestead Grays at Washington Park Monday afternoon, and with the first game of the season scheduled for Wheeling next Sunday, it means that stiff practise sessions must be held.

Beckwith, of whom much is expected, reported to Manager Posey on Thursday. The Grays schedule in April is the heaviest that the club has ever attempted. Twilight games are being booked for May. Write 324 Thirteenth avenue, Homestead, Pa., or call Homestead 0887.

Jock Collette has announced that the St. Richard Lyceum will be known as the W. L. Reineker Club this season. Some years ago the Reinekers were one of the strongest clubs in semi-pro baseball locally, and the revival of the name should help the club. Wally Smith, who organized the Reinekers, will be connected with the club and Jock Collette will act in the capacity of manager. Only the best clubs in the district will be brought to the Herron Hill grounds. For games write Jock Collette, 768 Anaheim street, Pittsburgh, or call Mayflower 7034.

The West View Presbys will be back on the field this year with a light first-class club. The club held a meeting during the week and elected H. Hamilton manager. Another meeting will be held Tuesday evening and the following players are requested to be on hand: Cook, Mueller, Drummond, Aberle, Williams, Sims, Kironick and James. For games call Atlantic 4900 and ask for H. Hamilton.

The Pittsburgh Silents have organized for the season and would like to hear from all first-class clubs in the tri-state district. Any club wishing to book the Silents should write Thomas Ross, 104 Federal street, Pittsburgh.

Pleasant news for the Homewood fans comes from an unofficial source that Heinie Ball will again captain the club this season and play third base. Harry Geisler will again be playing around the shortfield.

Manager Reilly has called a session for Cathedral Chapel Sunday afternoon at Sullivan's Field, Oakland. All players take note. An important meeting of the club will be held in the Cathedral gym Thursday night at 8 o'clock. Everybody should be on deck.

Preston Club will hold a meeting Sunday at the Casino at 2:30, when plans for the season will be discussed. Preston expects to enter one of the best leagues in the district, and all of last season's players are requested to be on hand for the meeting.

W. O. W. No. 205 is ready for the season. New uniforms have been ordered and practice games will be called soon. Games will be played on a home-and-home basis and any good team wishing booking should call Federal 1939-J, or write Joe Roscoe, 221 Churchill street, McKees Rocks.

Honesty Costs Team Victory

WASHINGTON, Pa., March 31.—When California High School defeated Union High School of Burgettstown in the semi-finals for the high school debating championship of Washington county, and qualified for the final championship round against Ellsworth-Cokeburg High School, the most delighted member of the winning team was Miss Ethel Roderick, 17-year-old athlete and honor student.

Ethel Roderick.

Miss Roderick, later, in checking up the tally of the judges, discovered an apparent mistake which failed to give a Union contestant 10 points which he had won. She investigated further, called the attention of the judges to the apparent error and saw her own team displaced in the championship competition through her honesty and integrity.

Although almost heart-broken that her team was eliminated, Miss Roderick says she is glad she had the courage to correct a mistake which no one else had noticed.

Penn Five to Meet Old Iroquois Team

The Penn Five of Sharpsburg has arranged to meet the Old Iroquois passers, one of the best teams ever turned out in the Allegheny Valley, on the Sharpsburg High School floor next Wednesday night. Included in the Iroquois lineup will be Rocca Parasi, who has just returned from college in Philadelphia.

The preliminary game will bring together the Sharpsburg Junior High passers and the Sharpsburg High Freshies in the third and deciding game of their series.

Ain't They Sweet?—And How!

Talk about your cake and pie,
Talk about your puddings; my!
They're not hardly sweet at all,
When it comes to Lloyd and Paul!
It's the Waner boys we mean,
Gamboling out there on the green,
Of the right and center tract,
In their famous brother act;
Say, now, have you ever ate
Honey in its native state?
Well, that's not the half of it,
When those Waners start to hit!
Makes one wonder just how tough
The fans are at digesting this sugar stuff;
But have no fear, we find forsooth,
They all have—somewhere—a sweet tooth.

W. & J. FOOTBALL PROSPECTS GLOOMY, DRILL REVEALS

WASHINGTON, Pa., Maarch 31.—The desperate inroads that graduation and defection have made in the ranks of varsity football men at Washington and Jefferson was indicated when Head Coach Andy Kerr launched his spring practice this week. While Kerr had approximately 50 men report for work, he had a forlorn group of regulars upon whom he can count for service next fall.

Of the eight backs who won letters but one is available, Gilchrist of McKeesport, being the only man of insignia rank who reported for duty and he was a substitute. While a first rate performer, he is scarcely rugged enough to fill the shoes of Amos. In the line Kerr had Secrest and Robinson, ends; Capt. Aschman at center and Douds at one tackle. All the others have gone. Of approximately a score of letter men of 1927, 15 have passed out of the picture and the crop of recruits from the freshman class is smaller and of poorer caliber than at any time since the Presidents inaugurated the one-year residence statute.

That there will be a wholesale shifting of players from the squad that remains is apparent. Coach Kerr frankly admits the desperateness of the situation and sees the only hope of providing anything like normal representation in his ability to recast a number of candidates.

"The spring practice sessions," said Kerr, "will be used almost exclusively in experimentation. As the situation now presents itself there is no hope of making a creditable team with the men as they have previously played. Our backfield situation is the worst and it is certain that it will be necessary to turn several line players into backs. Whether this can be done acceptably is a question. Outside of fundamental football little can be accomplished in the spring practice except to try and find what men we can recast to meet our needs."

Fortunately Wash-Jeff has a larger number of candidates for the end positions than for any other place. In addition to Secrest and Robinson, regular terminals, there are Paulie, McMunn and one or two others and Kerr will try to make backs out of some of them. With the exception of one or two men little is hoped for from the players who have come up from the freshman ranks of last season. Wash-Jeff had one of the poorest yearling squads in her history, this situation making Kerr's job so much more difficult.

Miss Volpe Star Coach

WASHINGTON, Pa., March 31.—Miss Mamie Volpe, University of Pittsburgh graduate, is the "wonder woman coach" of Western Pennsylvania by virtue of the remarkable four-year record of the girl basketball players of West Bethlehem High School, Washington county. Miss Volpe has been in charge of feminine sports at the school during the entire period and the lassies under her have amassed a grand total of 80 victories in 87 games played.

Mamie Volpe.

The West Bethlehem girls scaled the heights this year when they won the county championship and played a schedule of 22 games without suffering a defeat. The record made by Miss Volpe and her proteges is enhanced by the fact that West Bethlehem is one of the smallest schools in the county, having less than 50 students, both boys and girls included.

In winning the title this spring, West Bethlehem competed against the largest schools in the county, and in making its brilliant four-year record constantly played schools with much larger student bodies.

Mrs. Schoemmel's "Suit" Melts in Try For Record

Associated Press.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., March 31.

THE coating of grease that had served Mrs. Lottie Moore Schoemmel in lieu of a bathing suit for more than one long-distance swim betrayed her here today and melted, under the temperature of Florida water a few hours after she had set out to break the world's endurance record.

When about half the 10 pounds of lubricant had disappeared, leaving a greasy trail on the surface of the Deauville Casino salt water pool, where the attempt for a new mark is being made, friends procured for her a more conventional woolen garment which she donned as she swam.

Mrs. Schoemmel began at 9:23 a. m. her effort to better by one hour the present 48-year-old record of 31 hours set by Miss Edith Johnson, in Black Pool, England, in May, 1890. She hoped to continue swimming for 32 hours, or until 5:23 p. m. tomorrow.

Mrs. Schoemmel had been in training at various Miami Beach pools for the last three months, but had not revealed her plans for the attempt until a few minutes before she entered the water. She at present holds 27 distance records, her outstanding performances having been a swim from Albany to New York City and participation in the Wrigley Catalina Island marathon.

An official of the Amateur Athletic Union was among the official observers of her attempt.

OXFORD LOSES TO CAMBRIDGE IN CREW RACE

Light Blue Oarsman Set Pace at Start, Increase Edge as Race Progresses.

Many Americans in Tremendous Crowd Lining Banks Of Thames for Classic.

MORTLAKE, England, March 31. — (AP.) — Keeping up their post-war record of victory, Cambridge University's crew scored their fifth consecutive triumph over Oxford today in their eightieth annual race on the Thames.

It was one of the easiest victories of recent years. Cambridge led all the way and finished quite fresh 10 lengths ahead. The Dark Blue crew of Oxford was quite rowed out. After a desperate rally near the end they crossed the finish line with several men hanging over the sweeps in a condition of distress.

Cambridge covered the distance of approximately four miles in 20 minutes and 25 seconds, not threatening the record of 18 minutes and 29 seconds, made by Oxford in 1911.

The Light Blues started off at 38 strokes to Oxford's 36 and soon had their shell to the front. Gradually they forged ahead until open water showed between the crews at one and a half miles.

CAMBRIDGE ADDS TO LEAD

Still keeping their stroke above Oxford, Cambridge swept along gradually increasing their advantage, their steady, splendid rhythm contrasting with Oxford, which appeared ragged at the three-mile mark. At that time Oxford was three lengths behind.

Oxford made a gallant effort to catch the leaders at Barnes Bridge, but only lost more ground as a result. They saw their ancient rivals for the first time when they paddled to the bank to disembark. It was Cambridge's thirty-ninth victory. Oxford has won 49 times, but only once since the war, in 1923, did the Dark Blue win.

The usual tremendous crowd lined the river banks to witness the event. Among them was King Amanullah and Queen Soulya of Afghanistan, who saw the race from a motor launch near the finish line.

The race was rowed under excellent weather conditions. It had rained off and on during the early hours, but just before the start the sun came out and was shining down brightly throughout.

Not all of the crowd was on the ground. Several airplanes soared over the course in special flights and more than a score of persons, some of them Americans, saw the race from these moving aerial grandstands.

BUTLER, Pa., March 31.—Billy Bernlohr, mentor of the Butler High School nine, will pilot the Butler Bruinoils in the A. K. League during the coming season, backers of the team declared today. Bernlohr will hold the position of player-manager with the team. The Butler entry in the league will be composed entirely of local talent. Plans are being laid to hold the first practice session soon and consider only local players. The team will in all probability play on the athletic field, where games have been scheduled in the past.

Berlenback said he had plans to renew his activities in the ring.

Secondary Strength U. S. Olympic Hope—Robertson

TEAM BALANCE IS SECRET OF YANK SUCCESS

Men Finishing Behind Winner Contribute Most to Point Total, Head Coach Reveals

Germany and Finland Likely To Deprive America of Many 'Place' Tallies, Belief

By LAWSON ROBERTSON,
Head Coach U. S. Olympic Track and Field Team.

SOME time ago I said that it was the preponderance of our numbers, more than our completely definite superiority, that won for us so splendidly in 1924 over the Finns and Great Britain.

A long study of the statistics covering the results in those games bear me out.

Here is a tabulation covering the final point results in 1924, which show that we led the Finns by 49 points and the Britons by 171:

Total points of leading nations:

U. S. A.	255
Finland	166
Great Britain	84

For all events, points were scored for the first six men—or teams—to finish. The three leading nations scored places as follows:

	U. S. A	Finland	Great Britain
First place	12	2	3
Second place	10	5	3
Third place	10	3	5
Fourth place	6	8	3
Fifth place	5	3	2
Sixth place	9	2	6

In track and field events the winner is credited with 10 points; second place gets 5 points; third, 4 points; fourth, 3 points; fifth, 2 points, and sixth, 1 point.

Therefore, the three nations that fought it out were apportioned points as follows:

	U. S. A	Finland	Great Britain
First place	120	*101	30
Second place	50	25	15
Third place	40	8	20
Fourth place	18	24	9
Fifth place	18	5	4
Sixth place	9	3	6
Total	255	166	84

NOTE—Finland was credited with 11 points—not 10—for winning the 10,000-Meter cross-country team run.

The interesting part of these tabulations come in the knowledge that it was really our secondary team—not our first—that carried us to so great a victory over the Finns. For instance, here is another tabulation.

	U. S. A	Finland	Great Britain
Points scored for first places	120	101	30
Points scored for all other places	135	65	54

Our margin, as can be seen, would have been only 19 points on the Finns if there had been awards for only the winners of each contest. But we scored 70 more points than they did—and 81 more than England did—because of our showing behind the winners.

We carried a full team across in 1924—and won. Finland did not have a complete Olympic team. Neither did England. In some events they were not represented at all, whereas, in others, their entries merely were a gesture.

Yes, this Olympic duel in 1928 promises to be a thriller and, based on all facts and figure available, it will be a battle from its beginning to its very end.

Film Stars Go in for Love Game

HIGH ONE—Doris Kenyon, film star (center above), goes after a lofty return and smilingly sends it back across the net at her opponent.

TWO-PIECE OUTFIT—Joan Crawford of cinema fame is shown with her new two-piece sport suit. At left above she is attired for the tennis court in a pair of trunks and a sweater. By fastening a skirt over the trunks she is ready for a game of bridge or tea at the club or the trip home. Snappy, eh what?

BOWLING and BILLIARDS

THIS is another tournament week in local bowling circles, the fifth annual duckpin event of the East Liberty Bowling Association being slated for the Market Square Recreation Alleys, 409 Market street, beginning Monday and continuing on through next week. It will overlap in its second week on the first week of the American Duckpin Congress national tournament, which opens Monday of next week, to continue for two weeks, on the Haus Alleys, North Side.

Rae Garber, president of the East Liberty Association event, reports a large entry, with the leading rollers of this section entered. He has an estimated prize list of $2,500. Twenty prizes will be rolled for in each event and there also will be special prizes. The alleys will be equipped with automatic pin-spotters and the tournament will be conducted under A. B. C. rules.

The management is making every effort to give the bowlers their choice of bowling dates and out-of-town teams are being given consideration in this regard. Two Saturday dates are available for those coming from a distance. Entries still are being received and blanks and further information may be had by addressing East Liberty Bowling Association, care Market Square Recreation, 409 Market street, or calling Court 9191.

The entry list for the American Duckpin Congress tournament closed Saturday night with a record number of teams in the fold and the tournament committee will get to work Monday on the schedule, which will be announced some time during the week. A last-minute rush of entrants to pay up their fees kept the committee busy all day Saturday. The tournament has gone over the top with a bang with regard to numbers and popularity, due largely to the fact that under the new class system of distribution of prizes the mediocre as well as the topnotch rollers will share in the spoils. The Congress also has adopted standard alleys, pins and balls for the event and is taking all possible steps to insure the best of rolling conditions for the contestants. Prizes will be distributed in four classes, with the first 25 in each figuring in the money split. The national duckpin titles will go to the winners.

The second annual tenpin tournament of the Carrick Eagles will be concluded with Monday night's rolling. Some good scores have featured the event.

Charles (Cowboy) Weston, local veteran, will compete in the National Three-Cushion billiard tournament which opens in Chicago Monday. It will continue until Saturday of next week.

Entries close next Saturday night for the Muck Brothers' tenpin tournament in Braddock. Members of all teams in the Allegheny County League, the leading local loop, will compete, and some topnotch scores are assured. Ed Votel and Harry Smyers, former A. E. C. champions; Packer, Douglas, Ed Shepherd and Hamilton will be included in the field. Doubles and singles only will be rolled. The entry fee is $2 for each event and $1.50 extra for bowling. Mike Rudman is manager of the tournament. He may be reached by addressing Muck Brothers, 718 Braddock avenue, Braddock, Pa., or calling Braddock 2188.

Robert Carter, of Kalmer's, holds first place by one-half game over William Greenwood, of Ellis', as the Pittsburgh Three-Cushion Billiard League opens its final week. This pair have see-sawed for the topnotch since early in the race. Carter has three more games to play and Greenwood only two, so that the edge really rests with Carter. Greenwood's opponents will be William Eichenmiller, of Rudy's, who has won eight of his last nine games, whom he meets Monday night on the Rudy table, and Harry Quinn, of Kenny's, who is not such a stiff proposition, whom he meets Tuesday night at Ellis'.

Carter's opponents will be Eichenmiller, Tuesday at Rudy's; Joe Currie, of Ellis', who is in seventh place, at Kalmer's, and E. Z. Wainwright, of Rudy's, tail-ender, with whom Bob must play off a postponed game. From the caliber of the opposition that each faces it would apear that Carter has the better chance.

Eddie Smith, of Dimling's, appears to have third place clinched and George Pitfield, another of Chris Dimling's players, seems sure of fourth. Harry Quinn, of Kenny's, in fifth place, is only one-half game ahead of Eichenmiller and faces a hard battle to stay there.

The league will close its season this week, unless it is necessary to play off some of the postponed games to decide positions for the prizes. The loop has succeeded beyond the hopes of its most ardent supporters and its sponsors already are looking forward to next season.

The Catomas won the championship in the Men's Baraca Bible Class Bowling League for the season just closed by a margin of two games. Hutchison was the individual star, averaging 137 and knocking off high one-game of 199. A banquet will be held by the league in the Ragged Robin Inn next Friday night.

SHARON, Pa., March 31.—More than 60 women duckpin bowlers are expected to enter the annual Shenango Valley tournament to be held at the Buhl Club alleys in May. Singles, doubles and team events are listed for both sexes.

KANSAS CITY, March 31.—(AP.)—The highest three-game total rolled in the American Bowling Congress tournament here was made by Morris Axt of Fort Wayne, Ind., today in the doubles with Harry King. Axt scored 258, 212, 25; for 727, displacing Wall of Cleveland, who had 723.

Only a weak series by King prevented the Fort Wayne pair from going over 1300. King scored only 503, the team rolling 1280 for sixth place.

Today's best singles showing was made by E. Schoultz of Joliet, Ill., who scored 265, 191, 223 for 679, not good enough, however, to get in the first 10.

PALFREY GIRLS TENNIS VICTORS

Sarah Annexes Singles Title, Pairs With Sister Mianne To Cop in Doubles.

BROOKLINE, Mass., March 31.—(AP.)—Sarah Palfrey of Brookline retained her girls' national indoor tennis singles title today by defeating her sister, Mianne, 6-4, 6-2, and then the sisters successfully defended their doubles title against Virginia Rice of Brookline and Charlotte Miller of New York on the indoor courts at the Longwood Cricket Club. The score of the doubles final was 6-4, 8-6.

The singles play was brilliant, but Mianne, who is 17, was no match for the two years younger Sarah in the long rallies. The doubles was filled with erratic play. Miss Miller's driving and Miss Rice's volleying prolonged the second set, but the team work of the Palfrey sisters gave them the slight edge required for victory. The play of the sisters in both finals, however, was below their usual form.

The victories brought the total of national tennis titles held by the Palfrey family to eight. There are five sisters playing tennis and four of them have won championships.

Several years ago Polly, oldest of the Palfrey sisters, won the national girls' outdoor doubles with Fanny Curtis. In 1926, Lee Palfrey won the national indoor doubles with Marjorie Morrill, Sarah and Mianne won the 1928 outdoor doubles, the 1927 indoor doubles and retained that title today. Sarah has won the indoor singles twice and a week ago she and Mrs. George W. Wightman won the women's national indoor doubles, Sarah's first senior title.

Butler High Names Grid, Cage Captain

BUTLER, Pa., March 31.—Albert (Birdie) Krankota, star end of the Butler High School football team, has been chosen to lead the 1928 gridiron warriors, and, William Cross, guard and letterman of the Butler High basket[illegible] squad, was elected captain [illegible] 1928-29 squad at a meetin[illegible] Senior men today.

SCORING HIGH IN NUSS DUX TOURNAMENT

Obley and Randic Hit 1,163 In Doubles to Feature Displacement of Leaders.

Fabio, Setting Singles Pace With 620, Starts With Games of 245 and 234.

SCORING skyrocketed to record heights in the Nuss Brothers' duckpin tournament at Homestead as new leaders swept to the front in the singles, doubles and five-men team divisions Friday night and Saturday.

Obley and Randic, two McKeesport pin toppling experts, hung up one of the highest marks ever recorded in duckpin tournament history when they tied up the amazing total of 1,163 in the doubles. Both men were at the top of their form, averaging almost 200 pins per man per game. Leister and L. Golvash rolled 1109, and Torreyson and Dorn, previous leaders with 1097, dropped to third place.

In the singles ranks, too, there was plenty of excitement when Fabio of the South Side rolled out in front with 620. At that, Fabio's 620 was something of a disappointment, for he started with games of 245 and "34 only to fall to 141 when a series of bad splits kept him from bunching marks in the last 10 frames. Lachendro rolled into second place with 61[illegible] and J. Byers' 601 gave him third honors.

Three new leaders also were produced in the five-men team division. The Murphy team of the South Side became the pace-setter with the right imposing total of 2529, and Penn Recreation and Swissvale Arcade placed second and third, respectively, with 2504 and 2445. Previous high had been held by the H. K. Neilsons at 2423.

ALLAND

larity it never before has known here.

Indoor tennis is another attractive sport that has been "killed" here by the lack of suitable courts. A "major" winter sport in the East, indoor tennis soon may achieve that status here, for it is to be one of the headliners of Alland's indoor sports program. The Alland indoor swimming pool, the largest in the country, filled with salt water and illuminated for the bottom, is certain to put equatic sports on a new high plane, and the trapshooting, revolver and rifle ranges, up to 200 yards, have prompted a small army of gunners to enroll as Alland members.

Golf, perhaps the greatest of the major sports, is so well established that congestion is experienced on practically all of the Pittsburgh district courses, and it is with an aim to relieving this congestion that the Alland Field Club is providing three 18-hole courses constructed on ideal rolling terrain.

Other major sports such as football, baseball, tennis and soccer are to benefit greatly from Alland's 700 acres of athletic "equipment," but it is to be the first-mentioned sports, now without proper facilities, that the new Alland club will prove the greatest boon.

Lacrosse, archery, ice skating, tobogganing, field hockey, quoits and croquet are other "minor" sports on Alland's outdoors athletic program, and facilities for bowling, billiards, basketball, handball and gymnastics all are to be provided in the three and one-half acres clubhouse. Reading, card and music rooms, a library, a theater, dining rooms with gigantic cooking, a ballroom and a nursery also will be included in the gigantic structure.

Since first mention of the club's plans was made a week ago the membership growth has been extremely rapid, according to McIntire, and the enrollment of many ministers indicates that the club's decision to permit no sports competitions until after noon on Sundays has struck a popular chord with the churchgoers.

College Swimmers Break Five Records

PHILADELPHIA, March 31.—(AP.)—Five records were broken and another equalled in the fifth annual national intercollegiate individual swimming championships at the University of Pennsylvania tonight.

Two of the new marks battered the time of American intercollegiate performances of the past, while the others set new national intercollegiate marks.

The outstanding star was Bud Shields of Brigham Young University, Salt Lake City. He first lowered the 440-yard free style record to five minutes 8 3-5 seconds to gain the title and then reduced the 220-yard free style time to two minutes 19 8-10 seconds.

Michigan broke two relay records, the 200-yard and 300-yard medley, clipping 4-10 off its own American intercollegiate record of last year in the latter event.

W. Schott of Williams, in the 220-yard breast stroke, was the other record-breaker, his new mark being two minutes 29 7-10 seconds.

Mon Valley Coaches Favor Dribble

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., March 31.—(AP.)—More than 50 coaches and principals of high schools of the Monongahela Valley went on record as opposing the proposed abolition of the dribble in basketball at the regular spring meeting of the Monongahela Valley Athletic Association here today. It also was voted to recommend to the state association that officials who conduct basketball drawings not be picked all from one town.

Football and basketball schedules were drawn up and the grid program revealed that Wheeling High School will play two teams of the valley and probably three next fall. Games are already booked with Victory of Clarksburg here October 5 and with Buckhannon at Wheeling October 13. A game betw en Washington-Irving of Clarksburg and Wheeling at Wheeling is pending for November 10.

Lloyd Jordan Is Added to Colgate Staff

GREENSBURG, Pa., March 31. LLOYD JORDAN, former Pitt football and basketball star, for the past three years athletic director at Jeannette High School, has accepted the offer as assistant coach of the Colgate University football squad, it was learned today.

Jordan was asked some weeks ago to accept the position but withheld his decision. He will also have full charge of the basketball squad of Colgate.

THE GREAT OUTDOORS
— By GIB MARSH —

Gib Marsh.

APRIL, the month for the opening of nearly all outdoor pastimes, is here. The anglers, trapshooters and rifle shooters will begin their activities within the next two weeks, for in nearly every state of the Union where there are trout streams the season will open within the next 15 days and many trapshooting tournaments are scheduled throughout the country.

However, the big event this month for the Keystone State sportsmen will be the curtain raising for the trout season, April 15. There seems to be more interest manifested in this sport than in previous years and more recruits have been attracted to the pastime. So early on Monday morning, April 16, there will be an army of sportsmen along the mountain streams, lashing the waters for that wonderful game fish.

Already the sale of anglers' licenses has been heavy. The cost of the license is now $1.50, he additional 50 cents is to be expended for conservation purposes, as all the sportsmen are aware of. Briefly, all that is necessary to make the opening of the season 100 per cent successful will be favorable weather. I remember when the season opened on April 1, in former years, and I cannot recollect of ever experiencing favorable weather on the former opening date. As a matter of fact, that was one of the reasons advanced to amend the fishing code, setting back the opening date to the middle of the month. And more favorable weather has been enjoyed since that change was made.

In addition to the big-city sportsmen, there is going to be an army of natives out on the opening day. The sale of equipment to rural dealers of sportsmen's supplies has been large this spring, much larger than formerly. There was a time when the rural district anglers were not so particular about using modern lures, reels and rods, but now the country district sportsmen carry with them to the streams everything of recent invention to contribute to the success of the trout angler.

Many reservations have been made in Clinton, Clearfield, Potter, Elk, Center and all of the northern counties by the large city sportsmen, probably Center, Clinton and Potter counties being preferred by the major portion of the sportsmen.

As a matter of fact, the opening of the trout season seems to be attracting as much interest among sportsmen as the opening of the hunting season. Twenty years ago there was not much interest shown in the opening of the trout season, except among the natives and a few veteran city sportsmen. There was never included in the daily papers any articles in reference to the trout season in the Keystone State. Railroads made no provision for any additional traffic and made no solicitation for patronage. It is different now. On April 14, which is Saturday, extra coaches will be attached to all branch lines leading into the mountain districts. For the past month the various sportsmen's associations and clubs have been receiving communications from the railroad companies detailing the special preparations being made to transport sportsmen into the mountains of Pennsylvania for the opening of the trout season.

Because of the mild winter, the streams seldom being flooded, absence of any long and hard freezing, trout were not disturbed much. It is generally believed the season will be successful. However, the trout fisherman is a real sportsman. He is not concerned very much about taking the limit catch every day. If he has had a couple or a half dozen real conflicts with a hard fighting trout he is satisfied with the day.

DURING this month the members of the Western Pennsylvania Trapshooters' League will open their season's schedule and from present indications an interesting season is to be enjoyed. At the recent annual meeting Elmer E. Shaner, of this city, who is the father of the organization in control of the sport, was chosen to direct the activities of the league. J. W. McWilliams, of this city, who is well known as an expert all-round marksman and sportsman, was elected as secretary and treasurer, which is a further assurance of efficient direction of the season's activities.

Six registered tournaments will be staged, one each month and a post season's contest in October. The Fort Pitt Rifle club will begin its schedule later in the month. The contests of the Fort Pitt club attract the best rifle and revolver shooters in Western Pennsylvania and in addition to the standard events the club usually stages each Saturday afternoon contests for big game hunters, such as the rising bear and running deer targets.

No longer is there any reason for the big game hunter being required to wait from one big game hunting season to the succeeding one to practice and play with his favorite rifle. Nearly all of the sportsmen's organizations now hold monthly field meets where the big game hunter can participate in shooting. At the range of the Fort Pitt Rifle club the rising bear and running deer targets are built so, the shooting conditions are similar to those experienced in the big woods.

IT WILL be a pleasure for the trapshooters to have Elmer Shaner with them again to govern their sport. Over 50 years ago he shouldered the task of organizing the sport, which at that time was sliding into a profane condition. He drafted the program which provided for state tournaments and a national championship contest. I believe there were less than 40 contestants at the first national contest, held at the time in New York. Now the national association owns its grounds, buildings at Dayton, Ohio, and there were nearly 900 gunners took part in the national championship contests last year.

In his younger days Elmer Shaner was a master shot and was classed in competition along with the celebrated marksmen of the time, such as E. D. Fulford, Captain Jack Brewer, both world's famous wing shots, George McAllister of New Jersey, the late Tom Marshall of Illinois, and a score of others. In those days there was no distinction between amateurs and professionals. Now the sport is organized along lines similar to those of the National Golf Association there being contests for amateurs also professionals and open contests for amateurs and professionals to test their skill against each other.

However, Shaner did not confine his interests exclusively to trapshooting sport. Having [illegible] acquaintances among sportsmen in the various states, especially in the West, he was in a position to urge those sportsmen to organize in the interest of small and large game conservation. As a result state sportsmen's associations were organized which promoted better game laws. Yes, the gunners of this country can thank Elmer Shaner for the pleasure they now enjoy in the hunting fields.

LOTT ANNEXES NET CLASSIC

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 31.—(AP.)—George Lott of Chicago, No. 3 ranking player, won over Frank Shields, New York, national junior champion, in a bitterly contested semi-final match of the South Atlantic tennis tournament here today, 6-4, 11-9, 29-18. The length of the final set established a record for the local courts.

By virtue of his victory, the Chicagoan tomorrow will meet Jiro Abe, Japanese national champion, who won the right to contest in the title round by defeating Johnny Doeg, Stanford University star, in the other semi-final match yesterday.

Playing in his first tournament of the year, Lott was forced to top form to subdue the determined opposition of his younger adversary. His almost perfect backhand pulled him out of frequent holes and carried him to victory over Shields, who relied chiefly on a smashing service.

In the semi-finals of the men's doubles, Lott teamed with Doeg to defeat Jack Simpson, Atlanta, and Ted Burwell, Charlotte, N. C., 6-3, 6-8, 6-0; while Abe and Shields eliminated Lawrence Rice, Newton Center, Mass., and Ray Coffin, Philadelphia, 4-6, 9-7, 6-4.

Abe and Shields will play Lott and Doeg in the finals tomorrow, while in the mixed doubles, Alice Francis, Orange, N. J., and Shields will meet Clara Zinke, Cincinnati, and Lott.

TILDEN BEATS COEN

MEXICO CITY, March 31.—(AP.)—A stiff workout by the United States Davis Cup tennis players today showed little evidence of their being affected by the altitude of this city.

In one of the matches, Junior Coen, 16-year-old Kansas City expert, took two sets from Bill Tilden. The American captain then ran out the match with a score of 4-6, 7-5, 8-6, 6-3, 6-2.

LEAGUE TO HOLD BANQUET

The Broadway Junior Basketball League made up of boys ranging from 14 to 17 years of age, has completed their schedule and are to be guests of President George J. Smith at a banquet in the club headquarters. Its success under his personal supervision has been remarkable. There will be some 40 boys present when Mr. Smith and the officers of the Broadway Club take their places at the speakers' table to celebrate the closing of a season.

GYM CLASSES ACTIVE

Regular gymnasium classes at East Liberty Y. M. C. A. will continue throughout the spring and summer, was the announcement sent out last week to men members. This policy has been maintained for years.

Morgan Wins Court Title

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP.)—Hewitt Morgan of New York today won his first national amateur court tennis championship defeating William C. Wright, young Philadelphia player, in the final 6-2, 6-4, 6-3.

After Jay Gould, holder of the title for 20 years retired from singles competition Morgan, who lost to him in the challenge round in 1925 was considered as his logical successor. The New Yorker did not compete in the next two championships, but his performance today showed that this confidence in his ability was not misplaced. Morgan's play was superior to that of Wright, who holds the doubles title with Gould, in every department of the game. Before the final Wright had not lost a set in three matches.

Morgan's work on the hazard side of the net stood out especially. He returned Wright's hard service with ease and repeatedly laid down difficult chases which the Philadelphian was seldom able to win. His performance on the service side was almost as brilliant, except for the lack of power on his serve.

Only for a short time in the second set did Wright threaten Morgan's superiority. After winning the first game Morgan ran into a streak of erratic play which cost him four games in succession. He quickly rallied from this slump and won nine before the Philadelphian could take another.

N.Y. GYRATIONS FAIL TO MOVE LOCAL STOCKS

Price Fluctuations on Pittsburgh Exchange Held Within Narrow Limits.

Trading activities on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange continued at a moderate pace during the week just ended, the list here displaying no inclination to follow the wild gyrations in New York. Price movements here were comparatively narrow with the volume of business showing some contraction from the totals of a few weeks past when Carnegie Metals was in the limelight. Business last week was fairly well scattered with quotations showing changes ranging from fractions to 2 points and more in both directions. There was a little activity in the bank section where quotations ruled firm.

One of the principal developments of the week was the announcement of stock rights on Lone Star Gas, which has been showing moderate activity the last month or so. Tendency of the stock has been upward since the activity started early in the month, but the upturn of a few points was sufficient to attract enough selling to make the progress of the advance appear rather difficult. Evidently the stock rights to purchase the new share at par, $25, for each three shares held, did not meet the full expectations of the trading element. Previously there had been vague rumors of a stock dividend with some of the predictions running as high as 25 per cent. This gossip was based on the recent capital change announced by the company, which raised the authorized stock from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000. There is approximately $28,000,000 of stock outstanding at present. Following the announcement of the rights, there was some profittaking in the shares which forced it back more than a point from the level attained the day the news came out.

SEE BRIGHT FUTURE

Despite the action of the shares at the moment, friends of the company maintain a staunch loyalty to the issue and insist that its future is favorable for the next 10 years as it was 10 years ago. It is one of the largest gas companies in the west and is serving a territory where expansion and development are progressing at a remarkable rate. Its earnings have increased steadily over the past decade, and, while the 1927 showing was only slightly better than that of 1926, the fact the company was able to earn its dividend with a comfortable margin for the surplus account was pointed out as sufficient reason for expectations of much larger profits when the present expansion plans are completed.

In the miscellaneous manufacturing division of the market the price changes for the week were mixed. Some few stocks managed to add a little to the prices prevailing at the close of the previous week, while others, among them the newly listed Armstrong Cork and Standard Sanitary encountered mild selling which some observers were inclined to believe represented liquidation by some of the more cautious holders who felt that the speculative spree in New York will be followed by a drastic reaction which will exert an unfavorable influence on all open-market stocks good, or bad, high or low. Of course, stocks that have not participated in the wild markets will be better able to withstand any sudden collapse, but the usual accompaniment of a general break in the big market is a recession of prices on all stocks.

NOTES AND COMMENT

ANOTHER WILD WEEK-END

The market swirled and eddied in the week-end session yesterday as more than 2,000,000 shares of stock changed hands in the two-hour session. Congestion of the ticker service was more acute than at any time since the present violent markets were inaugurated a month ago. Final quotations on the tape were an hour behind the actual transactions on the floor of the exchange. Last minute dumping of stock by traders desiring to be out of the market over the week-end brought a sharp reaction in Radio and General Motors, which maintained their leadership of the market. Flamboyant predictions as to the ultimate price goal of Radio were heard in the Street again and conservative market followers were more timid than ever about belittling them for the simple reason that many of these conservatives had expressed themselves as believing Radio was "too high" when it was 100 points lower than yesterday's early quotation. The 13-point reaction in the stock did not affect the attitude of the strong traders who have been following the long side of the stock, but it is probable that some of the small fry were bounced out of the pan in the scramble.

ELECTRIC STOCKS SPURT

Westinghouse Electric and General Electric formed a team second only in prominence to General Motors and Radio. The two electric stocks went into new high ground on strong buying during the first hour, but both tapered off noticeably near the close. There was a rumor in the Street that an important announcement concerning General Electric and Radio will be forthcoming in a few days and it was assumed that Westinghouse will also benefit by the new arrangement since it, like General Electric, is heavily interested in Radio. Just what the announcement will be was not intimated, but one angle of the gossip was that plans are under way which will ultimately place the Radio Corporation of America at the head of the world's public utilities.

THE SHORT INTEREST

Brokerage houses that make a business of supplying stocks to the short contingent say there has been some reduction in the short interest, but from their observations it is not pronounced. There has been a substantial decrease in the short interest in stocks like General Motors, Radio and others that have scored sensational rises, but an increase in issues that have not moved forward with the very active issues. Some houses report an increase in short interest in Steel common and independent steel issues, and the copper and oil stocks. It is traditional that the stocks that are soaring invite a smaller speculative short account than the less active issues. The Dow, Jones list of 56 stocks shows three are lending at a premium, and 31 flat. That there is no scarcity of stocks like General Motors, Steel, Chrysler, American Can and Smelters is evident from the fact that they are lending at the maximum rate, 4½ per cent.

LOSS FOR SENECA COPPER

Net loss of $405,884 for 1927 is reported by Seneca Copper Mining Company after all charges, against net loss of $429,824 the year before.

MUNICIPAL FINANCING

The sale Tuesday of an issue of City of Chicago, amounting to $11,000,000 4½ per cent sewer bonds, maturing 1929 to 1948, represents the largest item on the list of scheduled municipal financing this week. Other municipal offerings for the week are scheduled as follows: Monday, $2,017,000 by the City of New Orleans; Tuesday, $12,500,000 by the State of North Carolina; Wednesday, $5,000,000 by the State of Alabama; Thursday, $1,768,000 by the township of North Bergen, New Jersey.

STOCKS AND MATERIAL WEALTH

While a large per cent of the total daily business on the exchange represents pure speculation, that is, over-night shifting of stocks from one house to another, or one individual to another, there can be no question that a large amount of investment buying has been going on. Proof of this is found in the continued increase in the number of shareholders of record of the various corporations. "The record activity and strength of the stock market is bewildering to some," remarked the head of a large bank, "but not to those who realize the wealth of the country is approaching the $500,000,000,000 mark, and the vast amount of surplus money for investment that is being created daily."

OHIO COPPER SHOWS LOSS

The Ohio Copper Company reports net loss of $61,416 for 1927 after charges, against net profit of $33,017 in 1926, or 1 cent a share.

WHITE MOTOR COMPANY

White Motor Company and subsidiaries report for year ended December 31, 1927, net loss of $595,341 after charges, and after giving effect to increase in book value of investment in White Motor Securities Corporation and White Motor Realty Company. In 1926 net profit including $382,724 undistributed profit of subsidiaries, was $2,566,291 equivalent to $3.20 a share; par $50 earned on $800,000 shares of stock.

OIL OFFICIAL OPTIMISTIC

The outlook for the oil industry as a whole and in California in particular, is especially promising, due to the co-operative programs that have been worked out during the last year and which unquestionably will be continued this year, according to James A. Talbot, president of the Richfield Oil Company of California. "The 1927 price slump, due to excessive and wasteful overproduction, established lower levels than the industry has experienced since pre-war days, not only for crude oil, but for all grades of fuel and refined products. It is with a feeling of increased security and optimism that we welcome the creation of governmental agencies to assist in solving the problems that will eliminate waste in operation and development, conserve our vital petroleum resources and build new confidence in the entire structure. The recent work of the Federal Oil Conservation Board, the American Petroleum Institute and, in California, of the government's conservation committee, will not only bring about the desired conservation of petroleum reserves, but will assist the leaders of the industry to save for its stockholders and the public vast sums of money."

FAVORS TEXAS-PACIFIC

Commenting on the railroad situation, H. S. Edwards & Co. say: "The railroad situation is now turning very definitely for the better. The aggregate net railway operating income of the first 50 roads to report February earnings was but 9 per cent below February of last year, which is much better than January, despite adjustment for the extra day. Texas-Pacific leads the list with net of $686,000, against $460,000 last year, and two months' income of $1,228,000, against $815,000 last year, an increase of over 50 per cent. The stock has registered a good advance, but is not through yet, and we continue to regard it as the bull rail of the year."

MARKET PRECEDENTS

So many precedents have been broken by the market so far this year that those who usually compare prevailing conditions with those which existed at other times in the past are no longer actively putting forth their theories. One observer who has been advising caution for the past two days, however, calls attention to the fact that whenever new records of activity have been made either in an advancing or a declining market it usually has signalled the reversal of the trend at least temporarily. For that reason this student continues to urge profit-taking when stocks hold score sharp upturns.

NEW YORK UTILITIES

A substantial increase in the volume of trading in New York utilities, notably Brooklyn Edison and Consolidated Gas, and to some extent in Brooklyn Union, at good advances, has created the view that special developments in connection with a merger, which have been expected for some time, may not be much longer delayed.

VACUUM EARNINGS STEADY

The Vacuum Oil Company reports for the year 1927 net income of $25,559,599 after depreciation and $1,000 reserve, compared with net of $25,263,655 in 1925 when no reserve was set aside. In 1926, however, $556,000 was charged to premium on bond retirement. The statement to stockholders says: "Due to expansion of Vacuum's organization, as a whole, and the increased volume of sales, the company has been fortunate in maintaining net profits fairly equivalent to net earnings of the previous year in spite of reduced profit per unit sales. The company has no funded or floating debt and profit and loss surplus December 31, 1927, stood at $81,717,323, equal to 130 per cent on $62,899,550 capital stock of $25 par issued. Stockholders yesterday approved an increase in authorized capital stock from 2,800,000 shares, $25 par, to 7,000,000 shares, to permit directors to declare a stock dividend of 100 per cent in the near future.

OUTLOOK GOOD FOR STEEL IN 2ND QUARTER

Mills Operating Between 85 And 90 Per Cent, With Pittsburgh Plants Above 85

By B. E. V. LUTY.

Steel enters the second quarter of the year with as favorable auspices as have usually prevailed at this date in active years. While it may be difficult to explain, the fact is that steel production is seasonal in character or the uniform precedent of the last few years counts for nothing. In years not subject to generally rising or falling production, output has risen during the first three months and decreased during the next four months, whereby second quarter production has run under the first quarter average and still more under the March rate. Allowing for difference in the number of working days, in 1927 production dropped 5.1 per cent from the first quarter to the second, while in 1926 the drop was 6.1 per cent. In the two preceding years there were larger decreases.

For the general comparison of this year with other years, therefore, it is favorable that steel production is expected to run substantially as high in April as in March. Decreases are to be expected in May and June but some decrease can occur without the second quarter running under the first quarter, and the second quarter can show an average 6 per cent under the present rate without falling behind the second quarter of 1927 or 1926. In a general way the first half of the year promises to total about the same as the first half of last year or year before. The forecast is made purely on the basis of the momentum the steel trade now has and an assumption that recent precedents will be followed. Possible trouble from politics, as occured in 1924, or from a break in the stock market, are not here considered, as that would be passing into the realm of conjecture.

CHICAGO HIGHEST

The highest steel mill operating rate is shown by the Chicago district, above 90 per cent, and the lowest by the eastern mills, while the Pittsburgh district falls between, at slightly above 85 per cent, the general rate of the whole industry being between 85 and 90 per cent.

Unfilled obligations of the Steel Corporation are expected to show a decrease for March, of somewhat the same amount as the February increase, which was 122,242 tons. It was remarkable that the unfilled tonnage increased continuously for five months. Other things being equal, rails alone would make a decrease, as there are heavy shipments, whereas the buying was nearly all done in the last three months of the old year.

Steel mills seem to be quite well provided with shipping orders for the next few weeks. Order receipts of late have been chiefly in the form of specifications against contracts, there being relatively little outright buying. It is particularly significant of the price situation that there has been less regular contracting for the second quarter than there usually is for a quarter. Either first quarter contracts were unusually liberal as to tonnage or time or there has been extending of contracts. Whatever the precise arrangements have been, large buyers will continue to receive deliveries for some time to come without making absolutely new arrangements, which means that on much of the tonnage shipped there will be no substantial price advance, in connection with the price advances mills announced in the first two months of the year.

PRICE ADVANCES

In most cases the advanced prices were spoken of as being applicable to second quarter contracts, but it is quite possible the mills did not really expect to obtain them. That they will not is evidenced by the fact prices are not infrequently shaded. While bars, shapes and plates are nominally at 1.90 cents, Pittsburgh, sales at 1.85 cents are far from uncommon. Black sheets are quotable at 2.80 to 2.90 cents and galvanized sheets at 2.65 to 2.75 cents. The $2.65 nail price is not having much test as jobbers are fairly well stocked and have deliveries still due them at old prices. Some mills have notified customers that portions of first quarter contracts not specified by Monday, April 3, will be canceled, and naturally the fact that any notice was called for is suggestive.

Fabricated structural steel lettings reported in the week ran under 25,000 tons, making a light week. The past six weeks have run at about 60 per cent of the rate in the first seven weeks of the year, but even with that slipping the first quarter promises to total well above the first quarter of either 1927 or 1926.

The automobile industry, apart from Ford, is likely to have its peak production in April, with little decrease in May, but a substantial decrease in June when makers will be liquidating for new models. Mounting Ford production at 5,000 a day will not be reached before July 1. Not a great deal of steel will be purchased by the Ford Motor Company as the Ford steel plant is an important producer and now has an opportunity to accumulate stock.

Both New York and Chicago report easier scrap markets. In the Pittsburgh district rather a tight situation has developed, with dealers bidding higher prices to fill short contracts and mills paying premiums to secure a good description of scrap. Foundry cast scrap, however, has dropped 50 cents, as has low phosphorus.

The Connellsville coke market remains quiet as to spot lots. Blast furnace requirements for second quarter were covered recently, and some contracts with gas makers, for the year from April 1, are now being negotiated.

STOCKS DROP UNDER HEAVY PROFIT-TAKING

Collapse Comes as Surprise, And Ticker Is 55 Minutes Behind Close.

By BROADAN WALL,
Universal Service Financial Expert.

NEW YORK, March 31.—Sudden wave of profit-taking brought unexpected halt to the advance in stock prices today and influenced the biggest morning session in history in which all groups of stocks dropped as the market machinery collapsed.

RADIO UNDER PRESSURE

It was 55 minutes after the close before all odd-lot transactions were recorded. Volume of 2,535,000 shares was well scattered throughout the list with the greatest activity centered in General Motors, Radio and other industrials sky-rocketed in recent markets. Motors led throughout, but the greatest pressure was applied to Radio when the sudden burst of selling started depressing the list after the first half hour. Radio was off 9 points at the close, with General Motors down 5, while losses of 1 to 2 points were frequent throughout the list. Foreign exchange was quiet and fairly steady. Cotton rallied slightly, while other commodities ruled firm in a very dull market.

As experienced last Tuesday morning the selling wave appeared from a clear sky and caught most of the trading community by surprises. As soon as general unsettlement was caused support was evidenced to motors and other leaders. Individual stock influences were without importance and the session was most important in demonstrating how extremely weak the technical foundation of the market is at present. Radio lost 4 points between sales at the height of the selling and while its friends were quick in throwing in buying orders the drop was further indication of how shorts have been forced out and the natural cushion of the market destroyed.

Such sudden price collapses are always experienced in the final exciting phase of a bull market. In the past when a series of such sudden breaks had been experienced there came the final crash from which recovery was not experienced until all the lambs were shaken out.

Radio's opening transaction totaled 20,000 shares and after holding around Friday's close for a while, it started to slip, and influenced nervous liquidation elsewhere. When General Motors dipped other automobile shares dropped also, but evidenced fairly good support on the decline. American Smelters and other coppers felt the effect of a rush to cash in part of paper profits accumulated in recent advance.

RAILS ALSO HIT

Railroads were not spared, although offerings were less excited than in the industrial list and the decline proceeded in more orderly manner.

Oils lost fractionally with the exception of Richfield, which gained a little for the session coincident with utterance of favorable forecast for the oil industry by its president who spoke particularly optimistic as to the prospects in California. American International registered a new high before dropping with others, buying being influenced by appreciation in value of its security holdings. Drug also moved higher with those most active in leading industrials continuing their operation therein.

SUGAR MARKET.

NEW YORK, March 31.—The raw sugar market was firm today, and while nearby duty free sugars were still obtainable at the old price of 4.61c delivered, Cuban sugar was 1.32 of a cent higher. The only sales reported were 55,000 bags of Cuban, late April arrival, at 4.65c.

Reflecting the steadiness of the spot market, raw sugar futures were generally firm and closed net unchanged to 2 points higher. The volume of business was not very large, and price movements were narrow with enough covering and trade buying to absorb the moderate liquidation and hedge selling. Another steadying influence was the expectation of a better movement of refined sugar during the coming week, which would probably lead to a more active demand for raws. Approximate sales were 30,650 tons. May closed 2.83c, July 2.92c, September 3.02c, December 3.06c, January 2.95c, March 2.88c.

There was no change in refined sugar prices, which ranged from 5.80c to 5.85c for fine granulated, but the undertone was firmer with a better inquiry reported.

ALL RECORDS BROKEN FOR STOCK SALES

Buying Up of "Floating Supply" of Shares Greatly Accelerates Movement.

By W. S. COUSINS

NEW YORK, March 31.—All records for wild and unbridled stock trading in the world's greatest security market were broken this week by a succession of 4,000,000-share days. A good portion of the stock sales were never recorded on the tape.

The financial district stood aghast as buying orders for a huge volume of stock converged on Wall street from all sections of the country. That the stock market was tremendously over-sold in February there can be no doubt, and the reopening of a whirlwind of excessive short selling accounts in large measure for the sensational market gyrations of the well known stocks. But the sweeping into Wall street of new investment money by the millions of dollars together with the buying of desirable stocks by the industrial leaders and the newly-organized investment trusts, have removed millions of shares of the "floating supply" of stocks from the market, and greatly accelerated the forward price movement of favorite stocks.

INVESTOR EDUCATED

As the individual and corporate wealth of this country has increased, there has been developing, side by side with that expansion, certain important features which have contributed to the education of investors along proper lines. Ownership of Liberty bonds has brought home to millions of people the realization of the joys of coupon-clipping, and imbued them with the ability to select the wheat from the chaff in securities.

The old style mining and oil stocks promotion has fallen by the wayside for the simple reason that the average American wage earner no longer falls for the alluring bait dangled in front of his eyes by the fake security salesman. Even the dentist and the country physician have had their eyes opened, and have shown remarkable ability of late to "spot" the bogey security man as soon as he crosses the threshold.

Sweeping out of the bucketshops in New York and other financial centers through the combined efforts of the Stock Exchange, the bankers' and merchants' organizations, removed an evil-smelling menace to the welfare of the small investor, diverting millions of dollars from the swindler and the confidence man to the channels of profitable industry. The benefits thus were twofold, for they not only assisted in the financing of industrial activity but brought in thousands of dollars in dividends to a new generation of investors.

CONFIDENCE DEVELOPED

To a certain extent the orgy of speculation now being witnessed in Wall Street is a logical outgrowth of the conditions outlined above. So successful have these new security stock traders been in selecting the stocks which have led most of the bull markets of recent months that they have developed with themselves a feeling of confidence in the future of American industry and the continuance of rising stock prices.

Not only American investors, but owners of American industrial enterprises are now compelled to accept a lower return on their capital than in pre-war years.

The reasons for this gradual decline in income yield are not far to seek. Competition in the field of industrial production as well as in the inflow of funds to the attractive security marts compels the cutting of cost corners, the scaling down of overhead expenses and the whittling down, wherever possible, of bonded debts and other burdens upon the net incomes of the corporations.

SAVE BY REFUNDING

Refunding of outstanding corporation bond issues at lower interest rates had proved to be an excellent channel of economizing for the corporations. It is only a few years ago that financing costs rose to as high as 8 or 9 per cent for the best rate companies. Managers and directors of the companies, realizing that a temporary money market squeeze was mainly responsible for these high charges, resorted to short time financing until such time as they believed the storm would blow over. By issuing their bonds, callable within a certain period, they provided against the burden of heavy interest payments in the event of the return of an "easy" money market.

It is well known that lower income yields on invested funds is but another way of denoting the rise in prices of the securities in which the funds are placed. Wall street is just now seriously discussing the question as to whether it is necessary to scrap some of its ideas with respect to the relationship existing between the earning power of corporations and the market values of their stocks. Some of the new leaders of finance are talking of a 25-to-1 ratio between stock prices and the annual net earnings of corporations, instead of the 10-to-1 ratio which has been taken as the standard for many decades.

The Dry Goods Market.

NEW YORK, March 31.—Cotton goods held steady today. Printed goods continued to sell freely. Sales of gray [illegible] equalled the output for the week. [illegible] week additional curtailment in [illegible] sheeting output will begin. [illegible] silk crepes, tub silks and taffetas were in demand from consumers. [illegible] were firmer at the week-end. Considerable sampling of new dress materials was reported among garment manufacturers looking toward new fall lines.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP.)—Week-end profit-taking in trading was so heavy that a new half-day total sales record of 474,000 shares was established caused a general easing off in prices on the curb market today. At times the ticker was as much as 25 minutes late and it recorded the final transaction 15 minutes after the market closed. The previous record for half-day total sales was 469,300, established on March 17 of this year.

A few issues advanced to new high levels in the early hours, but later there was a rush to dispose of holdings for the week-end, and under this pressure of profit-taking the list generally sagged. Recessions were limited in most cases, however.

Canadian Marconi, which accounted for more than half the transactions, became weak after opening at 8¼, just under its peak price. Marconi Wireless also sagged. Spanish and General moved to a new high at 6 on reports of a pending change of control of the company, and closed at 5⅞, up a quarter point net.

Procter & Gamble extended its gain 2 points to a new high at 267. Walgreen preferred, Eitinon Shild, Neisner Brothers, General Ice Cream and Parke Davis also were at new highs. Torrington Co. of Maine advanced 8 points to a new high at 102.

Bancitaly resisted selling, closing unchanged at 192¾ after having touched 193½. Interstate Department Stores preferred and St. Regis Paper were pounded down nearly 3 points, Melville Shoe dropped 5, National Banking preferred 6 and New Mont Mines and Tubize Art Silk about 5 each.

The utilities were irregular. Penn-Ohio Edison new and the warrants advanced to new high ground and Hartford Electric Light soared 10 points to a new high at 450. Profit-taking caused declines in American Superpower "A" and "B," Northeastern Power and United Gas Improvement.

Oils and pipe lines were weak.

WHEAT PRICES SOAR, DROP ON PROFIT SALES

Expectation of Smaller Crop Estimates Sends Market Sharply Higher at Times.

CHICAGO, March 31.—(AP.)—With unofficial estimates Monday expected to show a smaller domestic winter crop in prospect than a year ago, wheat today went sharply higher at times. Deferred deliveries of wheat touched a new top-price record for the season, but heavy profit-taking sales wiped out most of the gains. Export demand today for wheat from North America was slow. Wheat closed irregular ⅛c net lower to an equal advance, corn ⅛c off to ⅛c up, oats unchanged to 1c down, and provisions varying from 17c decline to a rise of 15c.

COTTON CLOSES BARELY STEADY

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP.)—Conflicting influences were reflected in narrow and irregular fluctuations in the cotton market today, the price of July contracts ranging from 19.05c to 19.13c, and closing at 19.08c, compared with 19.02 at the close the previous day. The general market closed barely steady, net 6 points higher to 1 point lower.

The opening was steady at an advance of 4 points to a decline of 2 points. There was some buying on the relatively steady showing of Liverpool and reports that increasing complaints of droughty conditions were being received from west Texas.

Active months sold up a few points after the opening, while there appeared to be some foreign buying, as well as week-end covering, and a little commission house demand. Buyers were soon supplied by realizing together with local and a little southern selling promoted by the outlook for fair and warmer weather in the eastern belt, but after selling back to about Friday's closing quotations, the market steadied up again in late trading. Last prices showed rallies of several points from the lowest on old crop positions, but were at about the lowest of the day on the latter deliveries.

SALES REPORTED HIGH

There were rumors that some of the southern mills carrying comparatively large stocks of raw cotton were selling a few contracts here as a hedge. On the other hand, reports were current that one of the large dry goods commission houses said sales of goods for all of its mills the past week ran 35 per cent ahead of production, and that sales for the five weeks of the March period were 94 per cent of full production, or somewhat more than 100 per cent of curtailed production. Houses with Liverpool, French and German connections were said to have had small buying orders here at the opening, but demand from these sources, local brokers said, appeared to be just about offset by southern selling.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 109,882 bales, against 177,816 last year, and 72,460 two years ago.

Private cables said hedging and Bombay selling had been taken by covering and trade calling in the Liverpool market, and that there was a fair demand for cotton cloths and yarns.

NEW YORK BOND MARKET

NEW YORK, March 31.—(AP.)—The bond market today was active and firm as a whole, but few individual features stood out. There was some week-end profit-taking, but offerings were well absorbed and no large recessions developed anywhere. Even the semi-speculative issues usually hard pressed when realizing develops, held close to yesterday's last quotations.

Confidence in the money situation, in view of Secretary Mellon's recent remarks on the gold movement, and the relatively small volume of new offerings during the week were factors contributing to the underlying firmness of prices. The new issues aggregated only $85,000,000 against $117,000,000 in the preceding week.

St. Paul bonds again were turned over in large amounts, but the price showed little variation from Friday's close. Andes Copper 7s dropped a point late in the session after moving up within striking distance of its peak price.

Public utilities were firm, but transactions were not especially numerous. Duquesne Light 4½s were bought in moderate amounts at their previous peak. Rails were dull, with nominal realizing in Missouri Pacific, Katy and Northern Pacific issues. Seaboard liens again turned downward, but the losses were moderate.

Peruvian 7s were in active demand around their best price of the year, and Budapest 6s established a new top. French 7s recovered a little of the recent loss they sustained on profit-taking. Otherwise the foreign group attracted no more than ordinary interest.

Small sales and even prices characterized the Federal government division.

TRUSCON GETS HYDRAULIC CO.

CLEVELAND, March 31.—(AP.)—Federal Judge D. C. Westenhaver today approved the sale of the Hydraulic Steel Company to the Truscon Steel Company of Youngstown at a bid of $1,600,000.

The judge refused a bid of $1,535,000 made by Lewis Leavitt and Theodore Freidburg, of New York, pointing out it contained a proviso that payment of $1,250,000 hinged on the bidders obtaining a 15-year first mortgage.

Creditors of Hydraulic will receive about 35 cents a share, as the company has $3,500,000 approved debts. The company went into receivership four and one-half years ago.

THE "EXTRAS" OF THIS SAD LIFE

(Copyright, 1923.)

AMONG American artists depicting life and character in the United States, Charles Dana Gibson stands out like Pike's Peak among the surrounding mountains.

Every month he publishes in the Cosmopolitan Magazine a picture of life in America. And that series of pictures in years to come will give a better history of this period than many written volumes.

Except for his own publication, Life, Mr. Gibson draws for no other publication

This picture, which has for its title "Extras," dealing with the world of moving pictures, shows an admirable collection of types—the old man and woman, the stout gentleman who plays the part of a banker, or, if desired, the "get-rich-quick" man; the little girl with her "dolly" and little "doggie," the big police dog, wonderfully trained; two or three little girls that thus far have missed being "The New Mary Pickford," the handsome young man, the good-looking villain, the comedian.

All are in this strip, and every one of them presents REAL LIFE, hope, eagerness, and some disappointment.

These are all "EXTRAS," would-be moving picture actors that have not quite yet ARRIVED. They wait about, the directors knowing where to find them in crowds.

They are happy, these poor extras, when something is thrown their way, some little "part" that may attract the public's favorable attention, some opportunity to display the talent that they feel within them but have never been able "to sell," to use the slang of commerce.

This is a pathetic picture of unreal life as it is near the big "lots," where the moving pictures are made on the edge of the Pacific. It is also a wonderful picture of the REAL LIVES of millions of human beings.

In this world, with its sixteen hundred million inhabitants, and in this nation with its 120,000,000 inhabitants, from the cradle to the grave's edge, there are only a few STARS, and an infinite number of "EXTRAS."

This is a picture of life in general.

"In the movies" those that do not become stars, unable to achieve any great place of their own, wait about and take what they can get. "Little bits," as the directors say, here and there. They are glad to do what they can, fitting in where they can be made useful.

What is true of the unreal world of moving pictures is true also of the real and hard world in which hundreds of millions struggle for their place in the sun, gladly taking "little bits" if they cannot do better, willing to wait in the army of unknown "extras"—the courageous among them always hoping that their chance will COME and that stardom and fame will replace patient waiting.

Millions of us feel that we have within us the power to do something better. But we have not QUITE arrived. We have not been able to make our dreams and hopes REALITY. So we wait, hope, and TRY, thinking that some day that great "Director," Fate, may see us for what we are and give us our chance.

Among the "extras of Hollywood" and the "extras" of daily life, among the millions not especially wanted, and always so pitifully willing, there is one great mainspring, one salvation—HOPE.

The little girl in this picture hopes that she will be the female Jackie Coogan.

The owner of the police dog hopes and believes that he has a four-footed star better than "Rin-Tin-Tin." The four pretty young girls have been told by their mothers that if they had their rights their names would be flaming on the billboards, and they all hope that will happen soon.

Two at least of the men, at the extreme left and right, are thoroughly convinced that with anything like an opportunity they could make John Gilbert "look like a floor walker."

What a life boat is to a sailor, a parachute to an air pilot, HOPE is to the human "extra," struggling through life, making the best of disappointments, always expecting that something better will come.

Most of the extras of the moving picture world hope IN VAIN. Most of them begin, LIVE and END as extras.

Yet from the ranks of those extras of today come the stars of tomorrow.

Norma Talmadge, for instance, tells you that in her first moving picture the hero of the picture was a horse, and she played a minor part.

William Fox was a human extra, getting $20 a week. He married and wanted a little more money. His employer wouldn't give it to him. So he quit. He bought $25,000,000 worth of theaters the other day.

L. B. Mayer and Nicholas Schenck, who run the great Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer concern, knew what it was for many a year to wonder what a $100 bill looked like. Irving Thalberg, their principal associate, was secretary for Carl Laemmle—at twenty or twenty-five dollars a week. He hoped for better things, and, incidentally, he WORKED FOR THEM.

He makes half a million a year now, and what is more important, has the fun of making important pictures.

Jesse Lasky was an extra, striving for a small place in vaudeville. He got the small place. KEPT ON WORKING; he didn't want to remain an extra.

Now he and Mr. Zukor run the Famous Players-Lasky concern. Zukor also was an extra once. And so it goes.

John D. Rockefeller was an extra, saving his first dollar. He has lived to give away his first $500,000,000.

Most of us are in the ranks of the extra, but all of us have a right to HOPE.

At the last moment things can change.

Only the other day in Hollywood a woman well past fifty, patiently playing little parts conscientiously, working as hard as though she had been a star, suddenly found herself one of the REAL stars. Her motherly face tells, when you see it on the screen, WHY she is a star. It was only necessary for somebody to recognize her power.

Her fame blazes forth in the bright electric lights.

And though she is past fifty, it is NOT TOO LATE.

We are never too old for happiness.

Study this row of extras, accurately drawn, intelligently studied by Charles Dana Gibson, eagerness on the young faces, resignation or patient hope on the old faces.

Remember that any one of us in the "extra" line may find himself a star tomorrow.

That does happen. The EXTRA of today becomes the STAR of tomorrow.

Work while you are an extra, earnestly and honestly and as hard as though already a star. That is the road to stardom on the "movie lot," and in real life, and NEVER give up hope.

HYSTERICAL HISTORY By J. P. McEvoy

Horatius Shows How He Held Bridge For Traffic.

SCENE: Bridge across the Tiber in Rome.
TIME: Rush hour, 50 to 100 A. D.

HORATIUS (whistles twice for east and west traffic): Bee-e-e-e-e-e-p! Bee-e-e-e-e-e-p!

CHARIOTEER: Come on! Come on! We've been waiting here for an hour!

HORATIUS: Hold your horses! Who's holding this bridge?

VOICE: Aw, go on! You ain't no cop!

SECOND VOICE: You know you can't keep that uniform over twenty-four hours.

THIRD VOICE: Come on! I've got a heavy date with a Vestal.

("When thou shouldst come
Then my cot with light should shine
Purer than the vestal fire."
—Drayton, Shepherd's Sirena.)

HORATIUS (loudly): Hey! Who'll help me hold this bridge?

SPURIUS LARTIUS: I might. What's in it for me?

HERMINIUS: I ain't got nothing to do this afternoon. I could give you a lift, but I'm not very good at bridge.

(If an insufficient bid is corrected by the player in error on his own initiative he must make it sufficient by increasing the number of tricks without changing the denomination. If attention has been called to the insufficient bid the player in error may make it sufficient in any way he chooses, but his partner is barred from any further bid during that deal.—R. F. Foster, Vanity Fair, May, 1926.)

HORATIUS: Thanks, noble Romans—

For how can man die better
Than facing fearful odds
For the ashes of his fathers
And the temples of his gods!

LARITUS: That's pretty, but when do we get paid?

BOAT (whistling for bridge): Who-o-o-o-o-o! Who-o-o-o-o-o!

CHARIOTEER: Hey, come on, let the bridge down, will ya? We can't stay here all day.

VOICE: Beat it, you big flat-footed fly cop!

SECOND VOICE: Hey, get away from that bridge. What do you know about machinery?

(Patent 1669185. S. Pastor, c/o Compania de Telephons de Maracaibo, Venezuelles. Automatic Dial Device—whereby either of a plurality of signal impulses may be sent over a line with the conventional substation mechanism without interfering with normal operations.)

MEEK STRANGER (advancing softly): Peace be with you, brethren.

HORATIUS: What kind of a bird is this?

LARTIUS: That's one of them Christians.

HERMINIUS: Where's your lion?

HORATIUS: They tell me over at the circus that the Christians are so tough the lions just give them up.

LARITUS: They better not get tough with me.

MEEK STRANGER: Peace be with you, brethren. Let me pass.

HERMINIUS (looking at his hand): I'd pass, too, if I had a hand like that.

HORATIUS: I'm sticking. Give me three.

LARTIUS (dealing three to Horatius, two to himself): I raise you one sestertius.

PUELLA: "I think it's just wonderful the way you interrupt the great commerce of the city just to help poor little me, You great big YOU, you!"

HORATIUS: I see your sesteritus a and boost it one denarius.

CHARIOTEER: Hey, don't try to cut in ahead! Get back in line!

CHRISTIANS (to Charioteer): Peace be with you, brother.

CHARIOTEER (climbing down): Another snide crack like that and I'll knock you for a row of catacombs!

ROMAN YELLOW TAXI DRIVER: Speaking of catacombs, boys, there's something wrong with the catacomb in my Super-Heterodyne. Why, I used to get Pisa like nothing and would you believe it, last week the missus got Lars Porsena and his gang broadcasting from Clusium? Hot stuff, Lars.

(Next Tuesday night: Lars Porsena and His Gang in "Fun from Andalusia." Also excerpts from "The Mikado" and a tabloid dramatic version of Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody Number 6.)

CHARIOTEER: Good old Lars! How is he anyway?

TRUCK DRIVER FROM SABINE FARMS: Hey, you big fly cop, when do we get across this bridge?

HORATIUS: Who's holding this bridge, you big gonnif?

TRUCK DRIVER: Gonnif yourself!

HORATIUS: You'll be getting a ticket the first thing you know.

TRUCK DRIVER: Yeh, you give me a ticket and I'll chase you up and down every one of the Seven Hills of Rome.

(The Seven Hills of Rome: Capitoline, Palatine, Aventine, Esquiline, Caelian, Quirinal and Viminal.)

ROMAN PUELLA FROM CURB: Mister officer!

HORATIUS (straightening toga gallantly): Yes, miss?

PUELLA: I'm terribly frightened in traffic, officer. Would you help me across the street?

HORATIUS: Certainly!

(Raises majestic hand for silence and takes Puella by arm. They saunter across.)

PUELLA (allowing big black eyes to play all over Horatius like liquid fire): I think it's just wonderful the way you interrupt the great commerce of the city just to help poor little me. You great big you, you!

HORATIUS: Oh, s'nothing! S'nothing at all! Would you like to see me back them up a couple of miles?

PUELLA: That would be ducky. Let's!

HORATIUS (pausing in middle of street): Hey, all you guys, back up! Come Come! Back Faster! Faster! (to Puella) How's that?

PUELLA: Swell! You great big God-awful gorgeous gorilla!

VOICE: Why don't you marry the girl?

COURIER: Make way! Make way!

LICTOR (riding up furiously on horseback): Who-a-a-a, Bucephalus! (To Horatius) Who are you?

HORATIUS (saluting smartly): Officer Horatius of Vatican Hill Precinct XXIV. In Roman figures, mind you.

LICTOR: What are you doing here?

HORATIUS: Holding this bridge for our altars and our sires.

LICTOR: And the ashes of your fathers?

HORATIUS: Check.

LICTOR: And the temple of your gods?

HORATIUS: Okeh.

LICTOR: I've been sent to inform you that the Queen of Egypt will be along here any minute and you are to let her through even though the traffic signal might be against her.

HORATIUS: Unless she is a friend of the chief of police and has a deputy star on her chassis, I mean her car—(confused) well, you know what I mean, nothing can be done for her.

LICTOR: I commend your noble spirit. The Divine Emperor will probably feed you to the goldfish for this insubordination, but cheer up, you'll live in song and story and in days to come, bright if dirty-faced little children in the third, fourth and fifth grades will recite your praise with appropriate gestures. By the way, here comes Nero now.

(NERO, PHILIP (Filippo de) Italian churchman, was born at Florence on the 21st of July, 1515. He was the youngest child of Francesco Neri, a lawyer of that city and his wife Lucrezia Soldi, a woman of noble birth whose family had long served the state. He was carefully brought up and received his early education from the friars at San Marco, the famous Dominican monastery in Florence.)

NERO: Hello, Horatius!

HORATIUS: We, who are about to die, salute thee!

NERO (affably): You may well say so. I understand you are holding the bridge here and won't let anybody go through.

HORATIUS: It amounts to that.

NERO: You are a brave fellow and you may have your choice of being boiled in oil or crucified. (to Lartius) And you, my good fellow, what are you doing here?

LARTIUS: Helping Horatius hold the bridge.

NERO: Dear me! Well, throw yourself into the Tiber. Come! Come! and you, too, Herminius. Do a double swan dive. No, don't bother to take off your armor. As soon as you come up, face me and salute. (to Captain of Praetorian Guard) When they do so see how many arrows your brave fellows can put into their faces before they duck. (guessing) Make it snappy. I'm going to be late for my fire.

(Lartius and Herminius carry out their part of the program and Nero applauds the Praetorian marksmanship.)

NERO: Well, Horatius, I'm off. Think of me kindly and one thing more, you'd better not be here when I get back—and you'd better not be gone. (Proceeds across bridge which is now lowered.)

HORATIUS: (waiting until he is safely out of sight, blows whistle): Bee-e-e-e-e-e-p!

(Traffic streams across bridge.)

HORATIUS (taking off helmet out of which handful of gilt cigars fall): Gosh, this traffic is getting worse every day. It's a wonder there aren't more accidents. I wish the captain would transfer me to some nice quiet street off the Appian Way.

(Important Note: The author has just discovered that in a note above he substituted Philip Neri for Nero. This is principally the fault of the editor of the Encyclopedia Britannica who ran these two names within a few pages of each other which would cause even so careful an author as myself inevitable confusion. I am leaving the note intact, however, as I feel every child should know something also about Philip Neri.)

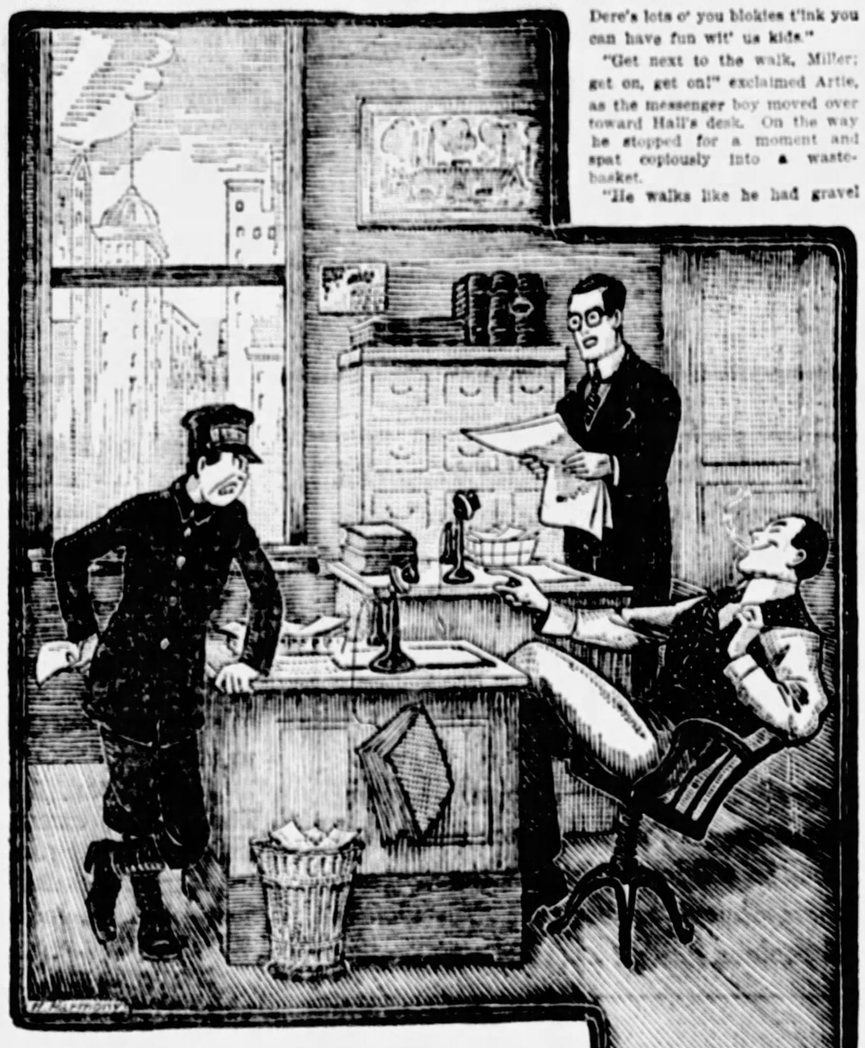
Puella Was Certainly On to Her Job In Old Rome.

ARTIE

Artie Goes to the Mat With Claudie

By George Ade

THE STORY SO FAR: Artie Blanchard is a young office worker with a great side talent for wise cracking. Each week he relates to his fellow white collar slaves, Miller and Hall, the latest sensational developments in his own private life. So far, Artie has related with gusto his success at a church social and a very conservative poker party. Soon after he tells the boys of his meeting a new sweetheart, Mamie, and his subsequent Lothario-like conquests, Artie confesses that he and Mamie have quarreled owing to excessive jealousy on Artie's part. Soon after the rift in the lute, however, Artie accidentally meets Mamie and diplomatically re-establishes himself in her good graces. It looks like they are in love with each other.



"WHERE'S he at?" the overgrown messenger boy asked, who had clumped slowly along the hallway and who now entered the room, leaving the door open behind him.

"Ain't he rare?" asked Artie, turning to Miller, who was gazing at the messenger with a look of pained surprise in his eyes.

"Where's he at?" repeated the messenger boy.

He seemed rather large and old to be in the uniform, for there was a scrabble of soft beard on his chin. His face and hands appeared to have been treated with fine coal-dust, his cap leaned forward on one side of his head and whenever he spoke he had to make new disposition of a large amount of chewing tobacco which he carried in his mouth.

When he asked "Where's he at?" he pronounced it "where'ce" and in all his subsequent talk he give the "s" a soft and hissing sound well prolonged, to the evident enjoyment of Artie and the mild wonderment of Miller.

"Where's who at?" demanded Artie, adopting a frown and a harsh manner.

"W'y, t'e four-eyed nobs dat sent me out on t'e Sout' Side."

"Are you the same little boy? Wouldn't that frost you, though, Miller? This is little Bright-Eyes that took the note for Hall."

"Aw, what's eatin' you?" asked the boy, giving a war-like curl to the corner of his mouth.

"Oh, ow! Listen to him growl. I'll bet you're the toughest boy that ever happened. That you been doin' all day—talkin' to fireplugs or standin' in front o' one o' them window demonstrators?"

"Aw, say! you t'ink you're fly. Dat young feller sent me all t'e way to forty-t'ree ninety-t'ree Callamet av'noo. I couldn't get back no sooner."

"Who was it the note was to?"

"His cutie, I guess."

"Oh-h-h-h! His cutie! What do you think o' that, Miller? Ain't this boy a bird! Can you beat him? Can you tie him? Boy, you're all right."

"So are you—dat is, from y'r head up."

"An' the feet down, huh? You're one o' them 'Hully chee, Chonny,' boys, ain't you? You're so tough they couldn't dent you with an ax."

"Is dat so-o-o-o?" asked the boy, with a frightful escape of "s" and a glare such as he must have used to terrify all the smaller boys at the call station.

"If I was as tough as you are I'd be afraid o' myself, on the level. You come from where the canaries sing bass an' the boys shave themselves with files."

"You t'ink you're havin' sport wit' me, don't you? I seer a lot o' dem funny bozos before dis."

"W'y, Claudie, I wou'dn't try to josh you. I think you're a nice clean boy. Ain't you goin' to take off your gloves?"

Miller leaned back in his chair and howled with laughter.

"I beg y'r pardon, Claudie," continued Artie. "I thought them was gloves you had on. Gee, is them your mits? You're a brunette, ain't you?"

The messenger boy had been somewhat taken back by the allusion to his "gloves," but he recovered and said, still gazing at Artie: "S-s-ay, you're having all kinds o' fun wit' me, ain't you? Well, w'a— ou—anything you say cuts no i— it' me."

"You'— er smoke up or you'll go out—" gested Artie. "You was a little slow on the comeback that last time. Get on to him, Miller; he's lookin' a hole in me."

"He has a bad eye," said Miller.

"Yes, and as the guy says on the stage, 'I don't like his other one very well, neither.' I'll bet he'd be a nasty boy in a fight. I'd hate to run against him late at night. Them messenger boys is bad people. Guess what they train on?"

"I don't know," said Miller.

"Cocoanut pie. That ain't no fairy tale, neither. Cocoanut pie and milk, that's what they live on. I'll bet Claudie here with the face has got about three cocoanut pies waddled into him now. How about it, Claudie?"

"Say," began the messenger boy, nodding his head slowly to emphasize his remarks, "I'd give a t'ousand dollars if I had your gall."

"That'll be all right. Keep the change. By the way, old chap, are you lookin' for any one?

This was another surprise for the boy.

"Yes-s, I'm lookin' for some one," he replied.

"Who it is is it?"

"W'y, t'e fellow dat wears de windows in his face. I got a note here for him," and he pulled it out of his pocket.

"Looks like you've been chewin' it. That's his desk over there. He got dead tired o' waitin' for you and went out to tell the police you was lost. I think they're draggin' the lake for you now."

"Aw, go ahead; dat's right. Dere's lots o' you blokies t'ink you can have fun wit' us kids."

"Get next to the walk, Miller; get on, get on!" exclaimed Artie, as the messenger boy moved over toward Hall's desk. On the way he stopped for a moment and spat copiously into a wastebasket.

"He walks like he had gravel in his shoes, don't he?" said Artie. "Look at the way he holds them shoulders. Ain't he tough, though?"

"Some day you'll get too gay an' a guy'll give you a funny poke," remarked the messenger boy, as he slowly settled into young Mr. Hall's chair and again directed what was supposed to be a terrorizing stare at Artie.

"What did I tell you Miller? Claudie's a scrapper. He'd just as soon give a guy a 'tump in de teet' as look at him."

The boy gave a sniff of contempt and began an examination of the papers on Mr. Hall's desk, picking up some of the letters and studying them, his lips going through the motions of reading. Artie sat, with face illumined, and watched the boy. He was evidently fascinated by the display of supreme impudence.

"Ain't there nothin' we can do for you?" he asked. "Miller's got some private letters you can read when you get through over 'here.'"

"Aw, go chase yourself," replied the boy.

"Well, Claudie, I've seen a good many o' you boys, but you're the best ever," remarked Artie. "If Hall's tryin' to win out any South Side lady friend I don't see as he could do better than send you out with the note. I think you'll be liked wherever you go. Gee! You've got that ice-house stare o' yours down pat. If you keep on springin' that you'll scare somebody one o' these days."

"Aw, lets go," said the boy in evident disgust. "When do I get to see t'e fellow dat sets here? Won't one o' youse pay me?"

"Miller, pay the boy and let him go. He ain't had any cocoanut pie for nearly an hour now, have you, Willie—or Claudie, I mean. What is your name, Claudie?"

"What's it to you?"

"Nothin' much, only I wanted to know. You've kind o' won me out. Here! Don't move. I'll bring the wastebasket over to you."

At that moment young Mr. Hall came in and said: "Ah, boy, have you that note for me?"

"S-s-s-ure. Where you been at? You're helva duck to keep a kid waitin' here. You've got 'o pay me 10 cents more."

"Don't be saucy," said Mr. Hall, severely.

"Ah, mush!

"You ain't mad, are you, Claudie?" asked Artie, as the boy laboriously moved toward the door, making noises with his feet.

"Oh-h-h, but you t'ink you're a kidder," replied the boy, with a sour smile.

"Look out! You'll step on one o' your feet there in a minute."

Then they heard him go clump-clump-clump out through the hall and away.

"Confound such a boy!" exclaimed young Mr. Hall.

"Oh, he's all right," said Artie. "Only you ain't used to his ways."

"He's tough enough," suggested Miller.

"Yes," said Artie, "I wouldn't be as tough as he thinks he is—not for a million dollars."

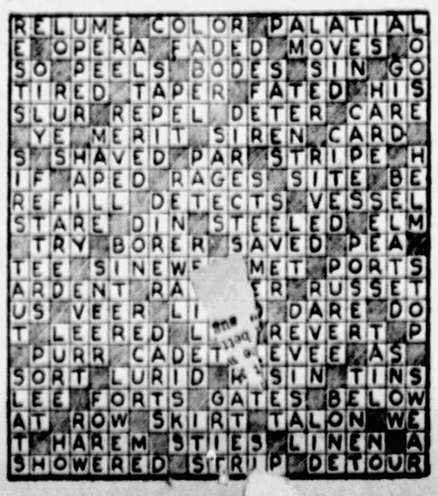
ANSWER TO LAST SUNDAY'S PUZZLE



ROPING THE NEWS by Will Rogers

Lindy Should Have Man to Shine His Medals.

WELL, all I know is just what I read in the papers, Lindy grabbed off another Medal. If he ever makes another Ocean flight and carries his medals with him he will have to take one of these big sausage-shaped Dirigibles. WE used to think that Sousa had more medals than anybody. You remember we just were able to see his Baton waving out in front of a solid breastworks of medals. He had so many it acted as a sounding board, and Flats and Sharps bounced off those inscriptions and welded themselves into real harmony.

Lindy has so many that it will just take one man shining them. Coolidge gave him this latest one. In fact Coolidge has given him most of them. If Cal would have given the Farmers a little speck of relief every time he handed Lindy a medal they would be almost out of the poor house by now. He has pinned so many medals on Lindy he can reach up and do it in the dark and hit the right place. This last one was a "Congressional Medal" that Congress gave to Lindy.

Should Give One to Congress

I am sorry that Lindy can't reciprocate and present Congress with one. Nobody has ever suggested giving Congress a medal. These Congressional ones are given for "Valor and bravery beyond the ordinary duties." I believe I will have one struck off and give it to Congress and Senate for, "Endurance in Oratory beyond and far on the other side of the duties for which they were elected." I will raise the funds by popular subscription, VERY POPULAR subscription. Congress would feel so proud over getting a medal that it might encourage them. Because there is times when I feel that they feel that they are not appreciated. When they get through giving Lindy all these medals, which he deserves, why don't they give him some lifetime job, Like Secretary of Aviation, or Commander and Chief of our forces in the air, or President of Commercial Aviation, or something that would keep him directly in touch with the air forces and still give us the benefit of his knowledge and consul. Course in disscussing the news of the day you cant get anywhere in a paper without stumbling over a Tea Pot. We have had more excitement over a Tea Pot than England has had over all her tea she has drank for years.

The Tea Pot Congress

This term of Congress which we expected so much of, will go down in history as the Tea Pot Congress. They coulden't pass any bills, for everybody was on the stand testifying somewhere. Anybody that they hear of that knows anything they will go out to his house and hold court.

Its the most accommodating court I ever saw. Their slogan is, "Testimony taken in your homes while you eat," "Testimony made easy." They are going out to El Paso now. They have been to Chicago a couple of times, and New York. If they can just locate somebody up in Seattle, that will give them a great trip.

You see the reason this investigation has dragged along so long is, these people who are testifying have all testified before many times, but the first few times you testify they don't expect you to tell anything. Its just to kinder get you used to testifying. It takes sometimes about five or six trials with you before you really tell much that you know. In other words they have to find out what you know before you will testify to it. No witness yet has ever told what he knew until the Committee had known first what he knew, and then made him tell it. They let a witness go for awhile till they find out some more on him, and then bring him back and make him testify to this last that they have found out. One witness tried to say that he thought the Democrats had gotten some money too. But that was so laughable that it was almost funny. If any man had given money to the Democratic cause it would not have left him liable for corruption, but to the insane asylum.

The Democrats wanted to follow up that clue and see if there really was any truth in it, and find out who it was and let him go ahead and give if he would.

Florida Is Coming Back

I just come out of Florida last week, was all over the State, and naturally everybody wonders how they are making out. Well, I want to tell you they are coming back strong. They had a wonderfully successful Tourist season down there this winter and they were all still there staying late, and all the Tourists were satisfied, they were not pestered to buy any lots. They dident buy anything and they also was not overcharged at the Hotels. They sent away a lot of satisfied customers. Heretofore a lot of people always come out kicking about how they had been overcharged, but not this year, and mind you it was not a bad year up north this winter either. Let it be a real bad winter and there will be no holding them in Florida. They have some splendid roads there, and they are doing all they can to develop their crops, copying California in their marketing.

You know everybody I think felt sorry for Florida. It really wasent the real people of Florida that was responsible for what happened. It was the outside grafter that come in there, put on all this boom and then ducked out, leaving the poor Floridians with the bag to hold. But they are sticking it out bravely and not hollering, and charged off the high prices to profit and loss, and are starting in now and will be on a sounder foundation than ever. In fact the whole South is stepping. States have found the recipe for success now, and no one of them has a monopoly on it. They are all doing the same thing that California did: first, build good roads, encourage divirsified crops, encourage Factories to locate in their State. They all know now that certain things will bring certain results, and they all are practicing it. No State now has a monopoly in progress. If a new thing comes out that will help a State, why in a month every other State knows about it and has it. When the people come South to the Democratic Convention they will have their eyes opened to what has taken place in the old South.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY by O. O. McIntyre

Little Western Town Is in Need of a Press Agent.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., needs a press agent. It is surprising how many famous people are either natives of St. Joe or lived there. Just this evening I learned that Moran and Mack were originally from there. So was Wellington Cross. And Montgomery and Stone began their march to fame from that city. Eugene Field used to work in St. Joe and wrote some of his best poems there. In the past 10 years I have heard of more celebrities from St. Joe than almost any other American city. I cannot recall the names, but I remember the town because it is 20 miles from my birthplace.

My early memories of St. Joe are associated with a name. That name was "Tootle." It seemed to me there were Tootle banks, Tootle theaters and Tootle this and that everywhere. And the name somehow impressed a childish sense of humor so that I fashioned jingles about tooting Tootles who tootled the toots.

* * *

France has now made presentation of American films almost prohibitive. And films made there must have French directors. Anything to kee pthe Americans out, and if foolish Americans would stay out for a while France would come to its senses. Night clubs once had the attitude toward patrons that French merchants have toward Americans. And look at the night clubs.

Earl Carroll Improved

Earl Carroll is returning seriously to the theatrical producing. His health has been restored after his Atlanta experience and he has acquired a mental calm in contrast to his depression upon being released. Innumerable backers have offered him carte blanche. He is planning a new theater and will have several productions this fall.

It was F. P. A., of the World, who discovered most of the soda jerkers of New York are young southern lads and incidentally they are about the most courteous of all employes meeting the public.

* * *

There seems to be much talk about the heat of Houston for the Democratic convention delegates. I have been in Houston in midsummer and it is rather scorching, but the nights are the delightfully cool sort that make Californians, coy and reluctant in discussing weather, speak right up.

Between the Battery and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street on Broadway there are 20,880 electric signs with 1,309,918 electric lamps. And that is what makes the White Way white. Outside of the Times Square section, which is as light as noonday at midnight, there is a great deal of bunk about the Great White Way. There are stretches of it as dark and other stretches no lighter than well-lighted streets in Indianapolis, Columbus, O., or Atlanta, Ga. Yet to come into Times Square from a dark side street is unforgettable for the stranger. There is no picture quite like it. There are signs that race, leap, coil, change color, offer bits of drama and scenes from everywhere. One sign presents 36 different slogans.

Rather an Odd Name

A gentleman sends me a billhead of a drug store which bears the name: "Lide and Cheatum," and says it is very prosperous.

One of the best newspapermen I ever knew was named I. M. Bunk.

Short shavings: Neysa McMien is said to be the highest paid female illustrator. . . . She is in private life Mrs. John Baragwanath. . . . Alexander Woolcoat is reported resigning from the World again. . . . The most expensive restaurant in New York is the Colony. . . . "Show Boat" is the highest priced musical show. . . . George Jean Nathan has 75 overcoats. . . . Sime Silverman, editor of Variety, permits his personal mail to accumulate for six months; then answers it all at once. . . . "Broadway" played to its biggest business the final week before taking the road. . . . Six big summer musical revues are promised. . . . Few of the roadhouses are to open. . . . Most of them starved last year.

A TRULY TERRIBLE SITUATION

Writers often try to trick magazine editors by pasting certain sheets of their manuscripts together to see if they have been read. One wrote in recently:

"I have discovered you pay no attention to new writers. You returned my manuscript unread and lied that you had read it. I had pasted pages 42, 43 and 44 together and they were still together when the manuscript came back."

To which was sent this reply: "Dear Madam: I do not have to eat a whole egg when I open it to discover it is bad."

It is a wonder magazines attempt to read the mountainous piles of manuscript sent them daily, but most of them do. One magazine reports that in a year, out of the endless stream, they salvaged only two stories worth while, and they had to be rewritten. The great trouble is writers do not study the contents of the magazines to which they send their material. Every magazine has a definite policy, and stories must fit in with this policy.

An Awkward Position

A gentleman in the next room of my hotel is raising Hail Columbia. From his telephone shouting it seems he sent his returned. He is in the city only for the day and has no other pair with him, and at any moment he is expecting some lady callers. Farce comedies have been fashioned out of lesser ideas.

* * *

News comes that Preston Gibson, the young society man, became involved in a check-passing charge in far away Shanghai. Here is a fellow who had wealth, position and talent, who married four beautiful women and moved like the glamorous hero of a book through the capitals of the world. His ancestry goes back to illustrious figures in American history. Yet his life has been one escapade after another.

One Girl to Another by Lloyd Mayer

Sandie Gives Some Unselfish Advice.

"MY dear, I'm aGOG and AGitated—I ACtually AM, because WHO do you a'pose is in TOWN at this point, my dear? ELMridge WARfle, no less! You remember, my dear—the odd soul who gave me such a tremendous RUSH on board the SHIP when Mother and I were returning from Europe—and don't you remember how I told you about his being FIRED from SCHOOL on account of stopping off here to SEE me last fall?

"Well, ANYways, my dear, he SUDDenly appeared from NOwheres yesterday and I COULDn't have been more THORoughly sPRISED, my dear, because I mean I thought he was simply LIVid on account of my telling him DEFinitely I simply could NEVer MARry him or anything, my dear.

"He was TERribly NICE, my dear, and said he'd simply GOT to SEE me about something AWfully imPORtant or something, so I told him to come round to TEA YESTerday, my dear, and we TALKED for HOURS, my dear—can you BEAR it?

"BUT I mean he was PERfectly SWEET, my dear, because he wasn't the LEAST bit SORE about my turning him DOWN or anything, my dear, and I ACtually adMIRE him TERribly for being such an awfully good SPORT about it, because I mean you know how MOST boys are, my dear, about anything like that—they usually just SULK or something and wax THORoughly obNOXious, but ELMridge has REALly gotten heaps OLDer in LOADS of ways, my dear.

"He's REALly TERribly atTRACtive at this point, because he's sort of soPHISticated and everything at this point, my dear, and he has the CUtest mousTACHE you've ever GAZED upon—can you BEAR it, my dear?

"Well ANWways, I was TOO imPRESSED because he said he wanted to ask my adVICE about something because he said he sort of FELT I KNEW him BETter than practically ANy other PERson he'd ever MET, my dear, which I REALly think is ABsiutely TRUE, because I HONestly got to know him AWfully WELL, sort of, on account of those awfully JNtl TALKS we had on the SHIP, my dear, and of course I found out LOADS about him by my FRANtic attempts to psychoANalyze him and trying to get him to release his LIBido and all, do you know what I mean?

"SO I said I'd simply aDORE to adVISE him about anything because I said I was awfully FOND of him and always WOULD be the only REAson I'd told him I couldn't MARry him was because I simply didn't care for him in THAT way and he said he underSTOOD how I FELT and he said that what he wanted to ask my adVICE about was the matriMOnial situation because he SAID there was this GIRL he'd met who was awfully KEEN about him and who he was awfully FOND of and all, only he said he didn't think he REALLY LOVED her because he was practically CERtain he still loved ME—can you BEAR it, my dear? I mean have you Ever heard of ANYthing so unCOUTH?

"Well, ANYways, he said this OTHer girl seemed to sort of exPECT him to MARry her or something at this point and he said he couldn't make up his MIND what to DO about it because he didn't think he OUGHT to marry her unless he was practically SURE he LOVED her and he said he couldn't be sure unless he saw ME again and sort of found OUT how I FELT about the situation, do you know what I mean?

"GOSH, my dear, I was ACtually TOO imPRESSED because I ACtually think it was AWfully HONorable of him to sort of come to ME about it, don't you really think it WAS? But, ANYways, you see the whole POINT about it was that he wanted to find out, sort of, whether I'd CHANGED, because he told me, you see, that if I HAD or even if I sort of THOUGHT there might be a CHANCE I WOULD, he wouldn't THINK of marrying this OTHer girl, because he said he didn't think it would be RIGHT.

"Well, HONestly, my dear, I was all-of-a-BIB-and-TUCKer at this point because WHAT could I SAY? I mean it was an AWfully DIFficult position, sort of for ME, my dear, because how on earth am I to know whether I'll ever CHANGE toward ELMridge, my dear? I mean I'm not in love with ANYbody I know but how can you tell when you MIGHT be, my dear, do you know what I mean?

"SO I SIMPLY TOLD him my dear, that I didn't feel any DIFFrently about him but of course I didn't KNOW whether I MIGHT and I said I thought if he REALly LOVED this other girl and she was CRAzy about him he ought to MARry her only I said I didn't see HOW he could LOVE her if he thought he STILL loved ME, and he said he guessed I was RIGHT, and now that he'd seen me aGAIN he was practicably SURE he loved me MADly—can you BEAR it, my dear?

"Gosh, my dear—I'm HOURS late for that POISonous Junior LEAGUE luncheon at the CLUB! I mean I'll have to LEAP hither and THITHer imMEdiately at this point but let's get together NEXT Sunday, my dear, because I want to tell you HEAPS of inTRIguing things—I mean I ACtually DO!"

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH by Havey Boyle

Alger's Books Always Made Heroes of The Lowly.

IN THE celebrated thrillers of Horatio Alger, Jr., read by many an American boy, characters of the sidewalks of any American city won the well-known battle in life for material success. His heroes were bootblacks and newsboys of city life, who, when not plying their trades, were stopping runaway horses, were saving helpless widows and orphans from designing villians, or chasing up an alley a skulking thief. Virtue and honesty always triumphed where Horatio Alger, Jr., touched his pen to paper.

Any of the characters that we see on the sidewalks of Pittsburgh—the boys who sell flowers, the boys who sell papers, or the boys who run messages—all were potential heroes to the sympathetic eye of Mr. Alger.

Since there are not many who do not recall Ragged Dick, who in spite of dirt and poor clothes, somehow had the appearance of a little gentleman, the biography of Mr. Alger just off the press, written by Herbert R. Mayes, will prove to be fascinating stuff for a great many.

Decreed Sound Reading

IN A great many homes of Pittsburgh and other communities Alger's works were decreed sound reading for the juvenile mind, where similar writings, if not bound quite so handsomely, were on the black list.

Yet, even in the paper-back novels that sold for five and ten cents, there were no fewer of the qualities that make for manhood on display than in the delicious delicacies confected by Mr. Alger.

How many, for instance, ever found Dick Slater of the Liberty Boys of '76, Young Wild West and his beloved Arietta, Dick or Frank Merriwell, among others, in any venture that was not 100 per cent lily white?

BUT Alger seemed to have the call and his name is recalled easily where the authors of the cheaper thrillers have gone to their reward without even a name plate to recall their stirring heroisms, captures, escapes, and eventual triumphs.

Nevertheless, if others have been neglected it is fitting that the life of the man who concocted many an interesting hour for boys should be put into words.

THE biography of Mr. Alger discloses that this man who wrote always of success was in life a failure. This man who always selected just the right girl for one of his heroes to marry was kept from marrying the only girl he loved. He wanted to write one good book and he never got around to it.

Alger Reached Millions

NEVERTHELESS Mr. Alger with his pot-boilers reached a number of men and boys—probably millions—and some of them came to be as famous as his heroes. Among those who read him, according to the author of the biography, were John Drew, Pat Rooney, Christy Mathewson, Phil Payne, Joyce Kilmer, Edward Bok, Upton Sinclair, William Wrigley, Jr., John Dewey and Will Durant.

MR. ALGER attended Harvard and he became a minister of the Unitarian Church. He preached while the Civil War was being fought. He wrote quite a bit of his stuff at the Newsboys' Home in New York, where he went to live for a time after he resigned from the ministry.

He wrote for a Sunday school age, when present-day realism was not so rampant in writing, yet that sugar-coated age was so cruel that Mr. Alger had to campaign against cruelty to children, the haunting of vice, and the robbing of widows.

COMEDY AND OPERETTA ARE STAGE ATTRACTIONS

GOLF AND MERRIMENT -:- ROMANCE AND MUSIC -:- BEHIND FOOTLIGHTS

DOROTHY BLACKBURN is prominent in Frank Craven's new domestic comedy, "The 19th Hole," coming Monday to the Nixon.

AND HERE is Frank, himself, who not only stars in the piece, but wrote it. He is seen with Kitty Kelly.

GEORGE RYMER portrays the hero in the dramatic operetta, "My Maryland," which is to remain another week in the Alvin.

THE CHARMING COMEDIENNE, Betty Byron, in "My Maryland," proves that even in war and operettas there's place for laughs.

Play Minus Music And One With Tunes Theater Offering

Waning Season Has but One New Production For New Week

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS.

ALWAYS when we spoke of seasons in the theater we have meant a period of several months of stage activity and then another period of no activity at all. And, even though the theater calendar has charged, so that, like nature, it embraces a full year, with spring treading on the heels of winter and merging into summer, which connects up with fall, the latter developing into winter, we still mean the cooler months when we speak of "season" in the theater. So it is in that meaning of the word that the theatrical season now is drawing to a close.

With "The Nineteenth Hole" as its swan song, the Nixon says good-bye to its regular season Saturday night, April 7, on which date Frank Craven and his company will have been in that theater for a week, appearing in this comedy of golf and domesticity. Mr. Craven, himself, drew it out of the same inkwell that he dipped his quill into for "The First Year" and other successes with which his name is associated. In Mr. Craven's company, as leading woman, will be Dorothy Blackburn, also Kitty Kelly, who is to cameo the flapper element.

Threatened with being "dark" because a booked attraction had swung off in another direction, the Alvin was working up a gloomy look that so affected its manager, John B. Reynolds, that he got busy and effected a change in the booking of "My Maryland." As a result that operetta by Dorothy Donnelly and Sigmund Romberg begins another week in that theater Monday.

The Davis brings back a couple of master gleemen, to wit: Gus Van and Joe Schenck. They will croon their harmonies as the headline act of Keith-Albee vaudeville. On the screen will be Madge Bellamy in "Soft Living."

The Academy is to have "Be Happy" as its glad-titled burlesque. Harry Jackson, comedian, and Agnes Nichols are featured in this offering to the gods of pleasure.

In the Harris, Loew's Aldine and Sheridan Square will be popular priced vaudeville and pictures. The Penn and Stanley offer photoplays and stage presentations.

As hinted previously the theater season is on its last legs, although it is to extend into May in the Alvin, where "The Love Call," "A Night In Spain," Walter Hampden, in repertoire, appearing in the order mentioned, are to follow "My Maryland." A May booking is Balieff's "Chauve Souris."

But when the regular season passes out does that mean no more theater entertainment? Nay, my dears, decidedly it does not. The Pitt, which turned its back on old regular season several weeks ago, is just waiting for Easter Monday, when it will throw open its doors again and the George Sharp players will welcome friends they made here last summer. Mr. Sharp already is in town, busy with arrangements for the premiere.

Following Mr. Craven's occupancy of the Nixon will come "Wings," a big motion picture, for a brief engagement, after which that theater will be a stock playhouse, with a company headed by Henry Bannister and Ann Harding. Guest stars will be a feature of the productions by this company.

Vaudeville, a year-around amusement in Pittsburgh for a number of years, and motion pictures, always ready to entertain in the months containing the "R" as well as those which have it not, also will serve to maintain the assumption that there is no "season" in the theater any more.

The matter of two stock companies looming in the near future may be taken as a sign. It shows that the stage is getting back to one of its earlier stages. Stock companies were the rule throughout the land years ago. Traveling companies put them out of business and "the road," as the stopping places of the troupers in their meanderings is called, became the backbone of the show business. The movies or something else, perhaps the enormous expense that attends traveling show companies, began to make "the road" a narrowing territory. Residents of cities the size of Pittsburgh perhaps don't realize it, but it is now cities of that size that constitute most of the road. The smaller one-night stands, except in few cases, no longer are visited by traveling dramatic companies. They have become three-day vaudeville and motion picture stands.

That transition has been going on for a number of years so that the road now is a very limited one compared to what it used to be. And stock is coming back to its former great prestige. City after city has taken to stock again and in many places the companies are permanent, existing the year around. There are now in the neighborhood of 300 resident companies in various parts of the United States. These, with the tent shows, giving dramatic productions in the West, and the show-boats, operating on the rivers in the South and West, have taken the place of "the kerosene circuit" and they are restoring the day, and perhaps the glory, of the old theater, which produced some of our greatest stage figures.

The stock movement has become so impressive throughout the land that some managers, perhaps with the circuit tradition back in their sub-consciousness, have established resident companies in several cities, and have met with success in all. Controlling several theters, maybe their next move will be to transport their companies from city to city, giving various audiences an opportunity to see new faces every so often.

There is organization among all branches of the commercial theater except the stock companies, but that is going to be remedied soon. A meeting of stock managers has been called to be held in New York April 5 and 6 for the purpose of forming a co-operative alliance. Thus does stock proceed on its way of firmly re-establishing itself as an important factor in the theater. It needs but little imagination to foresee the day when it will be the theater if present trends are maintained.

For towns too small to support a professional resident company, no less an artist than Eva Le Gallienne urges the development of the little theater.

SOLOIST

SENORA GLORIA MENDIOLEA is soloist with the Mexican Tipica Orchestra, coming Monday to the Stanley stage.

VAUDEVILLE

MARY SPOOR, formerly of the musical comedy stage, will appear on the new Harris vaudeville bill.

Frank Craven Nixon's Star

COMING to the Nixon for the week beginning Monday night is Frank Craven's newest comedy, "The 19th Hole," with Mr. Craven appearing in the principal role. The central idea of this play, as in the case of Mr. Craven's other big successes, has to do with an angle of the human nature that is found prevalent in the everyday people with whom one continually knocks elbows. The young suburban couple in search of quiet and limited recreation and with a none too acute understanding of the conditions about them is again to the fore. But this time the author places his characters in the midst of as ardent a lot of golfers as any section of the country has ever quartered. Playing opposite to Mr. Craven is Dorothy Blackburn and in the supporting company are Kitty Kelly, Marion Abbott, Josephine Deffry, Robert Wayne, Homer Barton, Roy Cochrane, Charles Macdonald, Howard Sydney, Harry Lewellyn. The staging is that of Sam Forrest. Matinees will be given Wednesday and Saturday.

Comedy of Golf By Frank Craven Full of Laughs

Author and Actor's First Big Hit, "The First Year," Farce of Newly-Wed.

By GEORGE SEIBEL.

WE ARE promised "continuous laughter from start to finish" at the Nixon Theater this week, when "The 19th Hole" will be played, a domestic comedy "by and with Frank Craven." This phrase means that Mr. Craven has written the play and takes the principal part. And the title indicates that the play is concerned with golf, though we are also assured that we do not have to understand golf or know anything about it to enjoy the "continuous laughter" aforesaid.

Perhaps you remember Frank Craven's best play, "The First Year," with the young wife who was train-crazy. That comedy ran for 740 performances in New York City, back in 1920, making its author's fame and fortune. It showed that Craven has the instinct of a genuine humorist, both as author and as actor. It also showed that he had the gift of observation, worth more than four years at any college—the gift that made Dickens and Balzac great masters. His previous play, "Too Many Cooks," with its appetizing title, had already told as much as far back as 1914, and had shown another thing—that Craven is one of the heirs, assigns and successors of George Ade.

Ade, with his "County Chairman" and "College Widow," started something new in our theater—the comedy of American middle-class life. Craven appeared in one of George Ade's plays, "Artie," and may have caught the infection that way. At any rate, he is a real humorist with a real knowledge of people. He doesn't get his mother-in-law jokes from "Life" but from life.

Besides the two plays already referred to, he wrote "Spite Corner" in 1922 and "New Brooms" in 1924. Last year he produced "Coal-Oil Jennie," later called "Money From Home," which was a comparative failure, perhaps because it tried to be more serious than his other plays. Perhaps because audiences cannot feel any respect for a hero who steals the spoons in act one and saves the baby in act three.

In that play a waiter girl, Pennsylvania Dutch, inherits $5,000 and goes to New York to spend it. Doc Durham, the part written by Craven for himself, is a doctor of the art of bunco, who marries Jennie for her imaginary millions. When he discovers that the millions are really imaginary, he is going to clear out. But an explosion in a factory awakens the life-saving passion in the doctor and incidentally makes him realize that he really loves Jennie.

Evidently the audience did not believe in Doc Durham's reformation or the permanency of his affections. It is a curious fact that the world has less respect for a reformed crook than a consistent villain. There may be rejoicing in heaven over the lost lamb that returns to the fold, but not in the heaven of the gallery gods. If Richard III had endowed an orphanage before running out of gasoline, we would all jubilate that Richmond caught him napping on Bosworth Field. As it is we hate Richmond for his long prayer and hope he breaks his fat neck before he gets to London.

Our Domestic Comedy

Craven is comparatively a young man—he was born at Boston in 1875—and he may be looked to as one of the promising providers of wholesome and true American comedy. In that little group which includes J. P. McEvoy, Winchell Smith, William Anthony McGuire, and the firm of Kaufman & Connelly, he holds a place of honor. His humor is fresh and clean and sweet—and if he puts an ice box and a kitchen sink on the stage we know that the cream isn't sour and the gravy tasted just right.

Golf is one of our national passions, and should afford the gentle social satirist a rich field for his humorous fancy. No doubt we will meet the typical golfers who talk of their achievements as if they had discovered America or made the world safe for democracy. We can't imagine Ajax or Hector playing golf any more than we can imagine Cleopatra pouring tea at a country club—and let us be thankful for that. The part played by Mr. Craven in his own comedy is that of a writer—which opens up another possibility of rich humor. Maybe we'll get a psycho-analytic study of the influence of the niblick upon the fountain pen. Maybe the behavioristic analysis of the foozle will elucidate the causes of literary failure. Anyway, we are reasonably sure of some laughs, whether intermittent or "continuous from start to finish."

Star Views Court Life

RICHARD BARTHELMESS has been spending some time in Los Angeles criminal courts gathering atmosphere for his next First National picture, "Roulette," from the story by Fanny Hurst. There is an important court sequence in the film.

Schumann-Heink, At Sixty-Six, Still Has Great Voice

Vocalist Impresses as Great Woman and Wonderful Artist.

By J. FRED LISSFELT.

THOSE who heard Schumann-Heink last week must have left the concert with boundless admiration for the woman and the singer. There were, certainly, noticeable inroads upon that most luxuriant contralto voice of its generation, but in every song there were unmistakable marks of majestic art, style and understanding of life and music. Underneath her unbridled comic spirit, when she spoke to her audience, everyone must have sensed the woman with a wholesome philosophy and a simplicity of faith that was not only refreshing but inspiring.

I know of no other singer who has been fated to run the gamut of human experiences so fully and intensely as Schumann-Heink. Readers are everywhere acquainted with her gypsy life, in the circus at first and later in all the great opera houses of the world. Last summer I was privileged to visit her daughter, the wife of an eminent surgeon in Leipzig. In that brief hour I could wonder at her career marked by the photographs on the walls and tables about me. In every likeness was grand determination tempered and softened wit' good humor. There were family groups, there were imposing operatic portraits, there was the grandmother surrounded by a growing generation of after-war youngsters. Each picture told why Schumann-Heink is inimitable when she sings a religious song, a lullaby, a love song, a hymn of praise.

As vocalist she had been so well taught that at 66 her bel canto style needs little dramatic force to project her meanings. But she was a born actress and mimic, with th keenest eye and ear for characterization. If she had but little voice, her histrionic ability would have won her fame. As a singer of songs, either modern or of the classic schools, her musicianship always commanded respect: she could differentiate between various epochs of music with uncanny skill when composing her programs. In opera, like all geniuses of the stage, after her roles were fixed musically and dramatically, she could alter them enough on a moment's inspiration to keep them everlastingly interesting. Her "Waltraute's Narrative" recreated the entire Nibelungen Ring, so subtly did she treat every phase of that superb scene.

During her brief speech the other evening, she wanted to impress us all with her motto, "I Serve." Then I fell to thinking how this wandering singer became one of us in America and how fully she served our musical life. I passed over, but not without profound admiration and respect, her earlier years when she was a mainstay at the Metropolitan Opera House and when she first sang at all the great festivals throughout our country, and came to those later years when musical life was awakening in rural America. I mean in more remote districts where public schools and mechanical instruments were teaching the love and understanding of great music. Then Schumann-Heink, armed with her overpowering personality and, of course, her renown as the great mother and musician, invaded these out-of-way places of the United States and sang first of all the heart-songs of the nation and of our race; having won the love and confidence of simpler people (simpler in a musical sense), she then sang them the songs of Schumann and Schubert, the great airs of Beethoven, Mozart and Wagner. Our people listened and learned. It is my firm belief that this singer has immeasurably helped the nation to its onward march in music so obvious today. As propagandist for the finest music, Schumann-Heink has hardly been recognized, for in this manner she has served her adopted country like a pioneering soldier.

Alvin Keeps "Maryland"

"MY MARYLAND," the popular American operetta of crinoline days, with Sigmund Romberg music, will be held in the Alvin for another week, but it is definitely announced that Monday begins the final week. It is stated that seldom in the history of the show business has a play met with such tremendous success on the road as has attended this company of "My Maryland," which is said to have smashed box office records everywhere it has appeared. Dorothy Donnelly and Sigmund Romberg, the authors, who also wrote "The Student Prince" and "Blossom Time," have given "My Maryland" virtually all the popular emotional elements that have threatrical appeal and, in addition, the play has the advantage of being wholly American. A huge male chorus always makes a hit, it seems, and the one in "My Maryland" keeps up the tradition.

THEY'RE OFF

SO WE THOUGHT until we learned "Galloping On" is not a horse race but the new stage show in the Penn. Alfred Latell is featured.

LEGITIMATE STAGE, VARIETY, BURLESQUE, FILMS

CURTAIN CALLS by GEORGE SEIBEL

It Had to Come!

With all kinds of all-star casts in old favorites, it is strange that one of the best bets in this direction has been overlooked till now. Someone put on "Ten Nights in a Bar-Room" down in Greenwich Village, the Latin Quarter of New York, and the play must have caught on, for now they are moving it up-town to Wallack's Theater. They might advertise it as a tank drama, and take a wet-or-dry referendum of the audience after each performance.

Amateur Nights

The annual Amateur Players' Contest of the Pittsburgh Drama League will be held during the week of April 15 in the East Liberty Carnegie Library. About 16 groups of players are expected to enter the competition, which means that 16 one-act plays will be produced on four successive nights. The first prize is a trophy and $100, and there are four additional prizes. It has been a happy thought to discontinue the prizes to individual actors, to encourage better ensemble playing.

Passion Play in Japan

Koryoku Sato, a Japanese dramatist, has written a Passion Play of which much favorable comment is current. It is reported to be both reverent and dramatically impressive. The scene of the Last Supper is a copy of Leonardo da Vinci's famous painting. Sato has made his Jesus more virile and masculine than the Oberammergau Jesus. All of which brings to mind that one of the greatest of all Passion Plays was written by a Viennese actor, who is buried at Weimar—Karl Weiser, whose "Jesus" ought to make a tremendous impression if staged by somebody like Reinhardt.

Davis Cards Van, Schenck

VAN AND SCHENCK will head the Keith-Albee vaudeville bill at the Davis, beginning Monday, the photoplay attraction being Madge Bellamy in "Soft Living." Van and Schenck bring new songs and comedy. Mlle. Rhea and Santoro, in a dancing act, with Marian Barclay, Arthur Clazin and Joe Witt, will be another important feature on the program. "Lamb Chops" is to be presented by George M. Burns and Grace Allen as a super-sophisticated boy and an equally unsophisticated girl. Cortini is announced as a master manipulator, famous European juggler and illusionist. The Caits Brothers are billed as a team of dancing comedians, who have won the name of "dancers with the flying feet," and Jean Adair, singer of popular songs, also is on the bill. Latest news reels and "Topics of the Day" will complete the program.

"Galloping On" Is Penn Show

THE stage show to open Monday in the Penn will be "Galloping On," a production devised by Frank Cambria. Ben Blue, comedian and dancer, will be one of the features. Another highlight on the bill will be Bonzo, animal impersonator formerly with the Ziegfeld Follies and with Sir Harry Lauder. The Bachelor Octet will entertain with vocal music. Miriam Lax formerly of the Metropolitan will have an important part. Robert C. Cloy, tenor, and the Felicia Sorel Girls also will appear. The screen will offer "40,000 Miles with Lindbergh" and Norma Shearer's photoplay, "The Latest from Paris."

REAL FOOD NOW FOUND IN THEATER

By ALAN DALE,
Famous Dramatic Critic of Universal Service.

NEW YORK, March 31.

AFTER all, the act of eating isn't a pretty function, at the best of times. Do you think it is? We eat for the reason that pigs eat, to sustain our bodies and nourish ourselves. Yet feeding has become with us a social function of universal appeal. When we want to "entertain" our friends, we ask them to put on their gladdest rags and come to see us feed, at the same time that we watch them similarly employed.

Richard Mansfield once talked to the pupils of the Franklin Sargent School of Acting, and said that "men with the manners of a seacook should no longer disport themselves on the stage—in society dramas. They should know how to use their knives and forks."

He told a beautiful and pathetic story of a young actor who, after he had cut up his meat, laid aside his fork and began picking up his food with his left hand. When Mr. Mansfield delicately remonstrated—and you can imagine how delicately he would have remonstrated—the young actor was amazed and wondered what in earth the crank meant.

This famous star then advised all young men who had not known the advantage of table etiquet to study a couple of years as footmen in some opulent families, and in that way pick up a few stray "manners." Of course, if we must "eat" in public, it is just as well to know how to do the thing painlessly, and thus remove the curse.

The theater, which has become realistic, has progressed from the papier mache stage. There was a time when, at a meal on the stage, papier mache food was liberally supplied. You saw piles of "property" oranges, mounds of "property" grapes and plenty of knives and forks. Today managers like to be less callous to the realities. Some of them put real food on the table.

Mr. Belasco, during the run of one play, had the stage meal catered by an adjacent restaurant, and the public paid their money to see real food eaten by real actors. Then comedy is often supplied by these meals. Perhaps you recall the immense courses that came to Mr. Warfield as he showed us the plebeian way of eating spaghetti without scissors. You may ask what would be the patrician way of eating spaghetti, to which I am forced to reply that there wouldn't be any, as patricians wouldn't eat it.

Every actress should learn how to "pour tea." It is a delicate art. She must smile, with teapot uplifted, and ask "How many lumps?" or "Do you take cream or lemon?" (In real life, cream is generally milk, but it sounds well to say cream and suggests opulence, which is necessary.) This seems trivial, but it is very important, indeed. And no "rough stuff," if you please. In England, afternoon tea is not a meal but an almost sacred rite, and here the idea is to imitate that. Remember what I tell you.

Asparagus is seldom served on the stage, and I'm glad. It is a very difficult job to eat asparagus artistically without seeming to tickle the uvula with it. It is, in fact, a feat. Yet every aspiring young actor and actress should know how to eat asparagus without inducing ribald laughter.

Spooning up one's green peas is not considered very kommyfo in real life, and every stage aspirant should study the question, yet not attempt to eat them with a knife. If we must eat pro bono publico, let us at least make a good job of it.

I am glad to see, also, that the stage manager has banished toothpicks from the table. Although in real life, people who do not use toothpicks are regarded as almost effminate, I never took much stock in them myself, as adjuncts to conviviality. As for finger bowls, much comedy has been directed towards them, and we still smile when the visitor drinks the water from his finger-bowl. Still, actors should be instructed in the gentle art of using these bowls artistically, and not seeming to lave in them. With the laxity of speech that prevails in the theater today, we must really guard against a laxity of table manners. One cannot be too careful. Remember the little piggy-wiggies.

Anne Forrest, who won many friends here as leading woman last summer, will play the principal feminine role opposite Mr. Morgan, and the supporting cast will include Mabel Kroman, Edwin Vail, Robert Lawrence, Gus Gorbes, Matthew Smith, Jr., Louise Gerard Huntington and Frank McNellis.

Youth, Moonlight Put Romance Into Current Pictures

Col. Charles Lindbergh Vies for Honors With Screen Heroes.

By MILDRED FILLMORE

RIGHT this way, ladies and gentlemen, and—in the words of dear old M. Antony—lend me your ears. I want to tell you that, no matter what the weather man predicts, it's going to be springtime in the movie playhouses. Ah, springtime? Methinks we'll have quite a few balcony scenes with us—you know, modern versions of the Romeo and Juliet trick.

Of course, it won't all be flowers, moonlight and love. There'll be some intense drama. And, yes, a cowboy or two. But youth and romance will dominate.

And there is something else. It is the special film, "40,000 Miles With Lindbergh," which is to be an added feature in the Penn. This picture depicts highlights in the epic career of the young aviator, as seen by the eyes of the news reel camera. In one courageous gesture, Col. Lindbergh made commonplace the most daring exploits of our popular screen heroes. He has written an epic beyond the dreams of our greatest dramatists.

And now let us descend to the beaten paths.

Ralph Forbes, very blond and very English, evidently has tired of uniforms and warfronts. All dressed up in happy civilian garb (any civilian garb is happy after you've been in the army, the boys tell me) he makes love to Norma Shearer in "The Latest From Paris," which also is to be shown in the Penn. And Norma, shaking off the tragic look of Kathie, goes back to her "His Secretary" style of portrayal and offers the characterization of a New York clothier's representative, who "puts it over" a hotel lobby full of salesmen or drummers—or the equivalent.

Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill return again as a romantic team—this time in "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath," Stanley and Regent booking. The title indicates there ought to be numerous laughs mixed with the romance that the names Mulhall and Mackaill signify. Jack has the role of an iron worker, who falls in love with a vendor of box lunches, who is our popular Dorothy.

"The Noose," a screen adaptation of the play of that name, will bring romance, underworld atmosphere and intense drama to the Grand and Liberty screens. The youthful and able Richard Barthelmess has the role of Nickie Elkins, the part Rex Cherryman created on the stage. Alice Joyce is in the cast.

The Olympic is to offer a picturization of "Doomsday," another Warwick Deeping novel. Florence Vidor portrays the girl who seeks a way out of the treadmill of toil and Gary Cooper is seen as the war veteran who finds work a salvation.

There'll be more romance on the Davis screen, where Madge Bellamy and Johnny Mack Brown will appear in "Soft Living." Johnny, you recall, is the collegiate gridiron star whom Marion Davies introduced to the film public in "The Fair Co-ed." In "Soft Living" he is seen as a wealthy but unsophisticated boy, who thinks an awful lot of Madge—in fact, so much that he wants to marry her.

Norman Kerry has transferred his screen affections from Mary Philbin to Lois Moran. Norman and Lois are co-featured in "The Irresistible Lover," the Aldine booking. The story has to do with a wealthy and handsome bachelor, who discovered there are many attractive women but only one love.

"Husbands for Rent," featuring Helene Costello and Owen Moore, is the attraction coming to the State and Sheridan Square.

To the Cameraphone comes "The Man They Could Not Hang," which unfolds the real life story of one John Lee. They tried to hang him three times, but something happened each time to the apparatus. So John's alive today.

"The Divine Woman," starring Greta Garbo, is to be one of the week's photoplays in the Schenley. The Kenyon is to present Will Rogers in "Texas Steer."

And, say, I almost forget the cowboy friend, Buck—your pardon—Mr. Jones. His picture, "The Branded Sombrero," is to be shown on the Harris screen.

And thus ends the story.

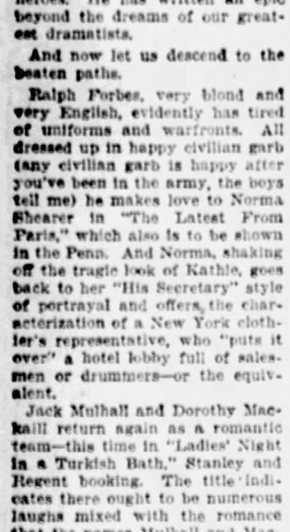
Comedy Film in Stanley, Regent

"LADIES NIGHT IN A TURKISH BATH," a comedy romance, will open Monday on the Stanley and Regent screens. Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall appear in the leading roles. The cast includes Jimmy Finlayson, Fred Kelsy, Reed Howes, Gwinn Williams, Ethel Wales and Sylvia Ashton. The story deals with an iron worker, who falls in love with a vendor of box lunches. Their love is said to hit a hundred funny bumps before Mulhall, as the iron worker, finally gets into a scrape that lands him in a Turkish bath and in a situation that causes him to nearly lose the girl entirely. There will be two stage attractions in the Stanley and in the Regent there will be a new Vitaphone program.

Lindbergh On Penn Screen

TWO photoplays will be presented in the Penn for the week beginning Monday. One will be "40,000 Miles With Lindbergh," a three-reel film, heralded as an actual picture of the daring achievements of the famous aviator. The other will be the feature photoplay, "The Latest from Paris," starring Norma Shearer. The cast includes George Sidney and Ralph Forbes. Miss Shearer plays the role of a representative of a New York firm of clothiers. When she succeeds in getting orders from the favorite customers of other salesmen, they combine to get rid of her. There will be a stage show, "Galloping On."

DRUDGE



FLORENCE VIDOR portrays a drudge, who seeks a way out from toil and the strife of livng in "Doomsday," Olympic film.

MANY TRAIL BELL SHEEP IN PICTURES

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, March 31.

MOTION picture players these last few years have shown a curious lack of initiative. There has been little or no new development in the matter of fresh types. Those who have succeeded in getting within the magic gates have been perfectly content to do the things that have made their predecessors famous, rich and popular.

I do not say this imitation has been deliberate. I think, on the contrary, certain little dark-eyed cuties have unconsciously imitated the Clara Bow, Sally O'Neill flapper and certain blonde beauties have tried to pattern their stuff after Marion Davies, Constance Talmadge, Mary Pickford and others who have already established themselves.

Possibly this continued imitation is not so much the fault of the players as of the public. Our movie patrons have themselves divided into groups to suit the average taste.

Edmund Goulding, Hollywood's philosophizing director, scenario writer and playwright, in discussing this curious phase, very aptly dubs it a "follow-the-leader policy."

Let me explain why Mr. Goulding's definition is so appropriate.

Robert Harron—David Wark Griffith's never-to-be-forgotten discovery, was the first of the slim, dark-eyed male heroes. He created a taste for this type of leading men. Then followed Richard Barthelmess, who was also one of the first of the sleek-haired brunets to intrigue the attention of the feminine public.

There followed our screen heroes and all of them brunetes. The popular idol, John Gilbert, Ronald Colman, and even the adored Valentino, all more or less built on the same plan.

These young men have so perfectly symbolized the movie patron's idea of a screen lover that a blond hero is almost an unknown quantity. With the possible exception of Conrad Nagel, Ralph Forbes and Milton Sills and Reginald Denny there are no male stars whose hair and eyes do not classify them as distinct brunets.

This same tendency to divide life into groups is evident in the adventuress who relentlessly wrecks homes. Theda Bara first brought the word "vamp" into the movies. Barbara La Marr, Nita Naldi, Margaret Livingston, are all modern and improved editions of the same type of character originally created by Miss Bara. We even classify Greta Garbo in this group, although she is a blonde, while the others have all been dark-haired. Miss Garbo was the first blonde siren—now there are others.

The antithesis of the dangerous siren is the cultivated woman people would like to have in their homes. In this group I place Florence Vidor, Alice Joyce, Hedda Hopper, Irene Rich, Aileen Pringle, all of them highly respectable and nearly always good women in the films.

Just a shade different is the "Perfect Lady." Clara Kimball Young was the first of this kind. Then we had Katherine MacDonald, Agnes Ayres and Olga Petrova. The perfect ladies haven't done so well. Perhaps the public craves less manner and more character. One never knows.

The dainty, winsome Marguerite Clark was the first of the naughty girls. Her frolicsome, mischievous creation has suffered many changes. Today we have Clara Bow, the college boy's delight. Along the way Clara Bow has picked up "it" and made of the simple Marguerite Clark heroine a much more intricate and a much more modern young woman. Sally O'Neill belongs in this group.

Coleen Moore is Marguerite Clark and Clara Bow combined, plus some of her own individuality.

Mary Pickford, even before Marguerite Clark's day, established the little blonde tomboy in the heart of the world.

Mary has had many imitators, but none of them have taken her place. Mary Miles Minter tried it and failed. Curls and beauty do not make the screen star.

The cold Nordic type who appeals to our aesthetic taste is Blanche Sweet, Anna Q. Nilsson Seena Owen. These girls are always decorative, always adaptable and always a diversion for the eye as well as the mind.

Norma Talmadge is a composite of several types. She plays a daughter of an earl and a gamin with equal facility. Evelyn Brent is fast proving that her range is unlimited. Gloria Swanson has also a varied repertoire that excludes her from any one class.

But for the most part the players are divided into classes to which they cling despite any change in screen roles.

Jones to Stage Novelty Dance

JOHNNY JONES will hold a novelty dance in Odd Fellows' Garden, South Side, Thursday night. The event will be known as a "Chicken Coop Ball." Plans are being made by Jones for his annual Easter Monday dance, which will be held April 9 in Odd Fellows' Garden.

Mitchell and Yost Concert

A CONCERT will be given April 16, in Carnegie Lecture Hall by Gaylord Yost, violinist, and Earl Mitchell, pianist. These two artists will present the three Sonatas for violin and piano by Brahms and play them in the order of the Opus numbers.

SINGER

ETHEL HAYDEN is one of the soloists who will be featured with the Mendelssohn Choir in its concert in Carnegie Music Hall Tuesday evening.

Buck Jones on Harris Screen

THE Harris screen for the week beginning Monday will present "The Branded Sombrero," starring Buck Jones. Featured with Jones is the performing horse, Silver Buck. Human players include Leila Hyams, Jack Baston, Francis Ford, Josephine Borio and Leo Kelley. Buck Jones, it is pointed out, was an automobile mechanic and later a cowpuncher, before he entered pictures. Vaudeville acts and short film entertainment will be on the bill.

Heifetz Here On April 10

JASCHA HEIFETZ, violinist, will return to Pittsburgh after an absence of more than two years for a concert in Carnegie Music Hall, April 10. His program will open with the Vitali "Chaconne," followed by Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole. A group of shorter numbers will follow, including "Estrellita," by Ponce-Heifetz; Schubert's "Rondo," Debussy's "La Fille aux Cheveux de Lin" and "Perpetuum Mobile," by Novacek. The closing numbers will be Nocturne in E flat by Chopin and Introduction and Tarantelle by Sarasate.

Novel Bill in Cameraphone

THE feature attraction in the Cameraphone, beginning Monday, will be "The Man They Could Not Hang." There will be a midnight show Sunday night. The production is said to present a true story of John Lee, convicted murderer, who went to the gallows three times, only to be saved from death when the trap failed to work. John S. Blonsick, organist, also will be a feature. There will be news pictures and a film comedy.

Owen Moore In State Film

OWEN MOORE and Helene Costello are featured in "Husbands for Rent," new screen attraction for the State. It is all about the nephew and the ward of a rich old codger, who insists that they marry each other. Other lovers appear and on the eve of the wedding the two new rivals elope, leaving the nephew and the ward disconsolate. News pictures and "Topics of the Day" will be on the bill.

Flotilla Books Leviathan Band

NELSON MAPLE Monday will bring his S. S. Leviathan orchestra to Pittsburgh for a week's engagement in both the Flotilla Club and the Venice Restaurant. The Leviathan orchestra will play for luncheon from 12 o'clock until 2 o'clock in the Venice and again there for dinner from 6 until 8 o'clock. It will make nightly appearances in the Flotilla Club for dancing. The Flotilla Club Revue, headed by Bebe Falvo, also will continue as an attraction.

IN CONGRESS

WILL ROGERS goes to Congress in the film, "A Texas Steer," one of the Kenyon photoplays.

SPALDINGS LEAD LIFE OF ENERGY

By MME. COBINA WRIGHT
Famous Songstress and Society Leader

NEW YORK, March 31.

SINCE describing a little luncheon party recently with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, in which America's own violinist told me of his plans and habits, a correspondent in Shreveport, La., has written me asking me to tell something of the characteristics and attributes of the violinist's wife, reproaching me at some length for discussing on previous occasions the domestic inclinations of several foreign couples, yet never divulging how an American wife copes with the artistic temperament and environment.

To begin with, let me say that the Spaldings have none of the affectations often associated with those in the public eye. They are full of fun and energy, and each possesses an enviable enthusiasm for living. I can't imagine "temperament," in the uncomplimentary sense of the word, ever disturbing their domestic peace. They are inseparable companions save on those occasions when because of hurried trips o difficult journeys, it is deemed inadvisable for Mrs. Spalding to accompany her husband on his concert tours.

Mary Spalding is a typical American woman of the highest and most refined standard. She finds the task of being an artist's wife the most delightful and inspiring of occupations. She considers that her husband's comfort and his art come before anything else in the world, but, being a well-balanced young woman, she does not make a fetich of it. She loves her home, and takes great pride in it. An admirable housewife, the atmosphere of her home is always the essence of good taste and comfort.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Spalding love books and invariably discuss their ideas on the subjects they have read. While they do not always share the same point of view, they always manage, by airing their views to each other, to reach an amicable understanding. In other words, I may add, there is a genuine bond of affection and understanding between these two charming people.

Mrs. Spalding tells me that since she was a little girl she has always adored the violin, and always went to violin recitals in preference to any other concerts. Her musical knowledge stands her in good stead since she has become a violinist's wife, for, like Merton's ideal, she not only is her husband's best pal, "but severest critic," and never hesitates to tell her husband her frank opinion of his playing. He, on the other hand, tells me how greatly he values her criticisms, especially since he discovered that his wife's comments after a public performance were invariably shared by the discriminating critic, Henderson, in his newspaper columns on the following day. No wonder Mary Spalding has the courage of her critical convictions.

In the winter time, while in New York, the Spaldings spend nearly all their spare evenings in the theater, for which Spalding has an insatiable love, being an amateur actor of parts, I may add. In the summer time, while "off duty," so to speak, they lead the life of two normal healthy Americans who love the out-of-doors.

They are both enthusiastic tennis players, preferring to be partners on the court as the best method of maintaining conjugal peace. Having won the men's singles in a tournament at Great Barrington, Mass., Spalding found himself a great favorite with the steward of the club, and he was amused one day to overhear the following telephone conversation between the steward and a newspaper inquiring for news:

"Yes, this is the Great Barrington Club?...Yes, a good deal of tennis is now being played here... Mr. Spalding has just come in from the courts, he is our best player...Yes, Mr. Albert Spalding ...Yes, I believe he does play the violin, too."

Mary Spalding told me of an amusing incident which occurred on a recent European tour she made with her husband. While on their way from Paris to London they were the victims of a highly inquisitive customs official. He had a decidedly wooden personality and plied them with numberless questions prompted, no doubt, by the stringency of the labor laws, though many of them seem anything but pertinent.

He elicited the fact that Spalding was a violinist and that Andre Benoist, who journeyed with them, was his accompanist, and then scrutinizing Mrs. Spalding, speculatively, finally asked:

"And what does this lady do in the company?"

"She merely endures it," replied Spalding.

On those occasions when she does not accompany her husband on his journeyings, Mrs. Spalding devotes her time to many charitable enterprises in which she is interested, sees a great deal of her friends and plays indoor tennis.

Some time ago Spalding presented his wife with a six-weeks-old wire-haired puppy, and, holding it in his arms, he explained, "I've brought you a bunch of love," whereupon, despite its high-falutin' pedigree, they gave it the plebeian name of "Bunch!"

A green parrot is an important member of the Spalding household. Mrs. Spalding has taught him many tricks and recently when her husband was on tour she added numerous phrases to the musical repertoire of the bird, which is an uncanny whistler.

Despite her lavish attention, the parrot utterly ignored her as soon as Spalding returned. She obviously became a person of only secondary importance, as the parrot, deserting her entirely, perched itself on Albert's shoulder whenever he was practicing, and, from that point of vantage, would whistle seductively all the tunes which Mrs. Spalding had taught her, from which Mrs. Spalding gathered this was indeed a female bird!

Kennywood Opens Soon

KENNYWOOD PARK will open its twenty-ninth season Sunday, April 15. Many of the park's buildings and amusements have been improved and repainted. A new amusement, known as the "Tilt-a-Whirl," has been added. There are 160 outings already scheduled for the summer. To help entertain these the management has engaged many prominent circus performers, who will present free performances afternoons and evenings. Dancing will be conducted each Saturday evening, beginning April 21. After May 17, which will mark the opening of the official picnic season, the dance floor will be operated nightly.

P. M. I. Chorus In "Mikado"

SOLOISTS in the performance of "Mikado" to be given in Carnegie Music Hall, Monday night, by the P. M. I. Chorus will be Romaine Smith Russell, Viola K. Byrgerson, Edith L. A recital to have been given in the Pittsburgh Musical Institute in December will be scheduled for an early date, it is announced. The players will be Agnes Guckelberg, Marian Clark Bollinger, Frank Kennedy, Charles N. Boyd and Dallmeyer Russell.

Mendelssohn Choir Concert

THE Mendelssohn Choir of Pittsburgh, Ernest Lunt conductor, will close its season Tuesday evening with a presentation of the "Passion According to St. Matthew," by J. S. Bach. A group of soloists, including Ethyl Hayden, soprano; Grace Leslie, contralto; Arthur Kraft, tenor, and Howard Gould, bass-cantante, will assist. The performance will take place in Carnegie Music Hall at 8:15 o'clock, with Earl Mitchell at the organ.

RUSSIAN

EVELYN BRENT is the heroine in Emil Jannings' Russian picture, "The Last Command," a Schenley booking.

Two Recitals For Sunday

TCHAIKOVSKY'S "Nutcracker Suite" is included on the program for the free Sunday afternoon organ recital to be given by Dr. Charles Heinroth at 4 o'clock in Carnegie Music Hall. Other numbers are: Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; Les Rameaux, Faure; Spring Song, Hollins; Melody for the Bells of Berghall Church, Sibelius; Marche Funebre et Chant Seraphique; Guilmant; Praeludium, Jarnefelt; Finale from Fifth Symphony, Beethoven.

In connection with the free organ recital in Carnegie Hall, North Side, at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, the Choral Ensemble Society will give Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" for vocal trio, chorus, piano and organ. The trio consists of Caroline A. Bracey, soprano; Arthur Davis, tenor, and E. Clair Anderson, bass. The chorus will be under the direction of Lyman Almy Perkins, with Mme. J. R. MacGregor at the piano and Dr. Casper Koch at the organ.

Olympic Film Is 'Doomsday'

"DOOMSDAY," coming Monday to the Olympic screen, is adapted from the novel of the same name by Warwick Deeping, author of "Sorrell and Son." Florence Vidor has the starring role as Mary Viner, the girl who has known all of the drudgery of endless work and who seeks a way out of the treadmill of toil. Gary Cooper takes the part of a World War veteran, who finds work a salvation instead of a soul destroying grind. The scene of the story is rural England. The Vitaphone program will include Coscia and Verdi, eccentric musicians; the Collegiate Four, in "Campus Capers," and "The Lemon," a comedy playlet.

Aldine Books Kerry, Moran

"THE IRRESISTIBLE LOVER," co-featuring Norman Kerry and Lois Moran, will open Monday as the photoplay feature in the Aldine. The cast includes Gertrude Astor, Lee Moran, Myrtle Steadman, Arthur Lake and Phillips Smalley. The story is that of a handsome and wealthy bachelor, who shows interest in many women. Then one day he meets one who cares nothing for his wealth or high standing. In fact, she considers his money and his reputation a drawback. How he wins her at the last makes for much of the action of the plot. Vaudeville acts will be on the bill.

Schenley Bill Has Jannings

"THE DIVINE WOMAN" will be shown in the Schenley Monday and Tuesday. It stars Greta Garbo. Wednesday and Thursday will bring Emil Jannings in "The Last Command." Evelyn Brant and William Powell are in the cast. "The Legion of the Condemned," with Gary Cooper and Fay Wray, will be seen Friday and Saturday. There will be two stage attractions for the week—the Rubeville Quartet and Clowning Xylophonists.

College Show Here April 16

THE Penn-State Thespians will appear here April 16, staging "Honestly Yours" in Syria Mosque. The play, written by the members of the organization, is a three-act show. The music and lyrics are also of student origin. The chorus work is under the direction of Al White, Jr., son of the instructor of the popular Philadelphia studio. The coaching of the leading characters is in the hands of Al Miller, of Allentown.

Grand Opera In Cleveland

THE Metropolitan Grand Opera Company's spring season in Cleveland will be for one week, opening April 30. As in former seasons, a number of Pittsburgh music lovers will take in one or more performances during the week's engagement, and reservations can now be placed through May Beegle, Pittsburgh representative.

Male Chorus In Concert

THE Pittsburgh-Apollo Male Chorus will give its second concert of the season next Thursday evening in Carnegie Music Hall, Harvey B. Gaul conducting. The chorus will be assisted by Henry Cowell, futurist composer and pianist.

Church Choir In "Messiah"

THE choir of the Mt. Lebanon Methodist Episcopal Church will sing Handel's Messiah in the church auditorium at 8 o'clock Thursday night. Edgar M. Hicks, basso, will appear as guest soloist. John C. Ussher is choir director.

FOR RENT

NOT A HOUSE but husbands in this case, which is Helene Costello's picture, "Husbands for Rent," State and Sheridan.

May Beegle's 1928-29 Series

THE May Beegle 1928-29 concert series will open in the Syria Mosque in October. The list of artists to appear includes Rosa Raisa and Giacomo Rimini, stars of the Chicago Grand Opera Company; Josef Hofmann, world-famous pianist; Mary Lewis, Metropolitan soprano, and Richard Bonelli, baritone of the Chicago Grand Opera; Mme. Homer and her two daughters, Louise Homer Stires, soprano, and Kathryn Homer, pianist; Beniamino Gigli; Albert Spalding, American violinist; Sigrid Onegin, contralto, and Rosa Ponselle, soprano.

Sheridan Has Owen Moore

"HUSBANDS FOR RENT," featuring Owen Moore and Helene Costello, comes to the Sheridan Square Monday for a three-day engagement. The plot concerns the determination of a haughty old Britisher to have his nephew, Herbert, and ward, Doris, marry. But this, it is said, is but the beginning of numerous complications that arise as the plot unfolds to its climax. An organlogue and vaudeville acts also will be on the program.

Social Dances Twice Weekly

OWING to requests received for association dances and parties in Danceland, the management has made a new schedule for public dancing. There will be social dancing on Thursday and Saturday evenings only. A special Easter dance will be held April 9. Paul Eagleson's Bachelors will furnish the music.

Barthelmess in Grand, Liberty

THE picturization of the dramatic stage play, "The Noose," will open Monday as the screen feature in the Grand and Liberty. Richard Barthelmess is the star and Alice Joyce is cast as his mother, the governor's wife. John Francis Dillon directed the photoplay. The cast includes Lina Basquette, Thelma Todd, Montague Love and Robert E. O'Connor. A Van Bibber comedy, "Too Many Crooks," will be shown in the Grand. The Liberty will offer a short comedy, "Racing Mad," and King's Harmony Makers on the stage.

"Soft Living" Davis Picture

"SOFT LIVING," a comedy-drama starring Madge Bellamy, will open Monday on the screen in the Davis. Madge portrays a young secretary, who thinks she is after money instead of love. Johnny Mack Brown is cast as a wealthy, unsophisticated boy, who believes that love will always find a way. The cast includes Mary Duncan, Joyce Compton and Henry Kolker. The stage program will be headed by vaudeville's popular comedians, Van and Schenck, in a program of songs and comedy.

Kenyon Books Will Rogers

THE feature attraction for the New Kenyon screen Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday will be "A Texas Steer," starring Will Rogers. Thursday, Friday and Saturday will bring "The Opening Night," with Claire Windsor and John Bowers. Along with the usual three acts of entertaining vaudeville, changing twice weekly, will be an amateur tournament that will be held during the entire week and which will present about 75 acts of local talent. Cash prizes will be awarded the winners.

Old-Time Bar Room Discussed

"JUST to think," sadly solilquized Old Doc Hawley, otherwise known as The Old Soak, "that a whole generation of posterity is growing up that was never inside of the Old Fashioned Bar Room!

"They got no idea at all what them places was like, nor the education they have missed by not knowing them.

"Some of them barrooms was such genteel places they would surprise you if you got the idea that they was all gems of iniquity and wickedness. The bartenders mostly wore clean collars and their hair slicked, not like so many of these soda-water places, where the hair is stringy.

"I will say that it took a good deal of sweeping sometimes to keep the floor clean and often the free lunch was approached with one fork for several people, especially the beans. Some barrooms was under par. But I am speaking of the average good class barroom, where you could take your own children or grandchildren, as the case may be.

"They was some very kind-hearted places among them, where if a man had spent all his money already, for his own good they would refuse to let him have anything more to drink until maybe someone set them up for him.

"But I will say they was always attractive to me, with those long expensive mirrors and brass fixtures like a scene of elegance and grandeur out of the Old Testament where it tells of Solomon in all his glory. And if a gent would forget to be genteel after he took too much and his money was all spent and imbue himself with loud talk or rough language and maybe want to hit somebody, and there was none of his friends there to take charge of him, often I have seen such throwed out on their ear, for the better class places aimed to be decent and orderly and never to have an indecent reputation for loudness and roughhouseness.

"I have not kept up with politics like I used to since the barrooms vanished. My eyes ain't what they used to be and the newspapers are different from each other, so who can tell what to believe? But in the old days you could keep in touch with politics in the barrooms.

"It made a better citizen out of you, for every man ought to vote for what his conscience tells him is right and to abide in politics by his conscience.

"Closing the barroom has shut off my chance to be imbued with political dope and who to bet on in the next election. I am not so good a citizen as before the saloons was closed. I would not know who to bet on in any election. But I used to get straight tips, and in that way took an interest in politics, which a man is scarcely to be called an American citizen unless he does.

"I see everywhere all the doctors and science sharks says to keep in touch with outdoor sports if you want to keep young. I used to know all about all those outdoor sports, and who the Giants had bought and what they paid for him and who was the best pitcher and what the dope was on tomorrow's entries at Havana, but all that is taken away from me now the saloons is closed. I got not chance to get into touch with outdoor sports, and I feel it in my health. Some of these days the Prohibition elements will wake up and see they have ruined the country, but then it will be too late. Taking the sports away from a nation is not going to do it any good when the next war comes along.

"You used to be lined up by the bar, five or six of you, and suppose you was in the real estate business, or something, a fellow would say he had an idea that such and such a section would be going to have a boom and that started you figuring on it.

"Well, I missed a lot of business opportunities like that since the barroom has been banished. What can a country expect if it destroys all chances a man has got to get ahead in business?

"The good book says to laugh and grow fat and since the barroom has been taken away, what chance have you got to hear any new stories, I would like to know? What I want to know is how could you blame a country for turning into Bolshevistors if all chance for sociability is shut off by the government from the plain people?

"The better class of barroom had pictures on the walls. And since they have been taken away what chance has a busy man like me to go to a museum and see all them works of art hand painted by artists and looking as slick and shiny as one of these here circus lithographs? A country wants to look out what it is doing when it shuts off from the plain people all the chance to educate itself in the high arts and hand painting. Some of the frames by themselves must of been worth a good deal of money.

"The Good Book says you shalt not live by bread alone and if you ain't got a chance to educate yourself in the high arts or nothing after a while this country will get to the place where all the foreign countries will laugh at us, for we won't know good hand painting when we see it. There was a story to all them hand paintings, and often when business was slack I used to talk with the bartender about them paintings and what did he suppose they was about.

"What chance have I got to go and buy a box to set in every night at the Metropolitan Opera House and hear singing? The right kind of a crowd in the right kind of a barroom would all get to singing together and furnish me with music.

"A government that takes away all its music like that from the plain people had better watch out. Some of these days there will be another big war and what will they do without music? I always been fond of music and there ain't anywhere I can go that it sounds the same, sort of warmed up and friendly and careless. Taking away my music has been a big blow to me."

"YOU USED TO BE LINED UP AT THE BAR, FIVE OR SIX OF YOU."

"SOME OF THE FRAMES BY THEMSELVES MUST OF BEEN WORTH A GOOD DEAL OF MONEY."

"THE BARTENDERS MOSTLY WORE CLEAN COLLARS AND THEIR HAIR SLICKED."

MUTTER AND MUMBLE

By J. P. MEDBURY

APRIL FIRST

MUTTER—Good morning Mr. Mumble, aren't you going to congratulate me?

Mumble—Congratulate you?

Mutter—Yes, this is April first, my birthday.

Mumble—That's wonderful. I see you were born on time.

Mutter—Don't get sarcastic. Do I look like a fool?

Mumble—No, but I might be wrong.

Mutter—Some big men were born today.

Mumble—Is that so, I thought they had to start in as babies.

Mutter—I'm not so dumb as I may look.

Mumble—Of course not, you couldn't be.

Mutter—I don't like to brag, but I'm a self-made man.

Mumble—Yes, you look like the work of an amateur.

Mutter—When I was 21 I had a 32-year-old head on my shoulders.

Mumble—That's fine. Was she a blonde or brunette?

Mutter—At 19 I went all through Harvard.

Mumble—That's funny, I didn't think they had sightseeing buses in those days.

Mutter—When it came to school, I could pick up anything.

Mumble—I know just what you mean, my brother was a kleptomaniac, too.

Mutter—While I was attending Harvard, what you think I went in for?

Mumble—I don't know, maybe it was too cold outside.

Mutter—Listen, I asked you a sensible question.

Mumble—Maybe you did, but that's nothing to brag about.

Mutter—I'm trying to tell you what I followed at college.

Mumble—You don't have to tell me. I know what every freshman follows.

Mutter—Is that so, what?

Mumble—Girls.

Mutter—You're crazy, girls never entered my head.

Mumble—Oh, then you weren't broad-minded.

Mutter—I went to school to learn something.

Mumble—Well, a dame taught me a lesson once.

Mutter—I had to get out and support myself. My folks left me an orphan.

Mumble—That's too bad, who supported the orphan?

Mutter—With no parents in the world, I had to go on alone.

Mumble—That was wonderful, whose loan did you go on.

Mutter—What's the matter with you, Mr. Mumble, aren't you used to talking to intelligent people.

Mumble—Yes, but I'm making an exception in your case.

Mutter—An education is a marvelous thing.

Mumble—Sure. I was graduated from college, but my folks wouldn't let me accept a sheepskin.

Mutter—Why not?

Mumble—They were vegetarians.

Mutter—Did you belong to any fraternity?

Mumble—No, I wore my own clothes.

Mutter—I'm a member of two secret societies.

Mumble—What's the name of them, I'll bet I know the head waiter.

Mutter—I'm a Greek letter man.

Mumble—So is my brother. He typewrites menus for restaurants.

Mutter—I hadn't been in school three days until I went out for the football team.

Mumble—Is that so, what did they send you out for?

Mutter—Were you interested in any sports?

Mumble—Sure, I was captain of the dice squad.

Mutter—Did the athletic instructor give you any encouragement?

Mumble—Yes, he said I ought to make a good wrestler.

Mutter—What made him think you could be a good wrestler?

Mumble—I was always throwing so many big parties.

Mutter—Do you mean to say that you practiced drinking?

Mumble—No, I got so that I didn't have to practice.

Mutter—I'm proud to say that I kept my nose to the grindstone.

Mumble—So would I, if mine had been as long as yours.

Mutter—I wanted to make my mark in the world.

Mumble—That was silly.

Mutter—Silly?

Mumble—Sure, you should have learned how to write.

Mutter—I was kicked around a lot, but I graduated with flying colors.

Mumble—They must have been black and blue.

Mutter—Spelling was my long suit and when it comes to big words, I don't have to take my hat off to anybody.

Mumble—If you'll just step into this restaurant with me, Mr. Mutter, I'll accept your challenge.

Mutter—Accept my challenge?

Mumble—Yes, we'll order a couple of bowls of alphabetical soup and see if we can spell each other down.

Miss C. Delano, Washington, writes: "About two years ago I was bothered a great deal with a muddy, sallow and pimply skin. After taking a short while I noticed a wonderful difference. My complexion has improved, also headaches, indigestion and biliousness never bothered me any more."

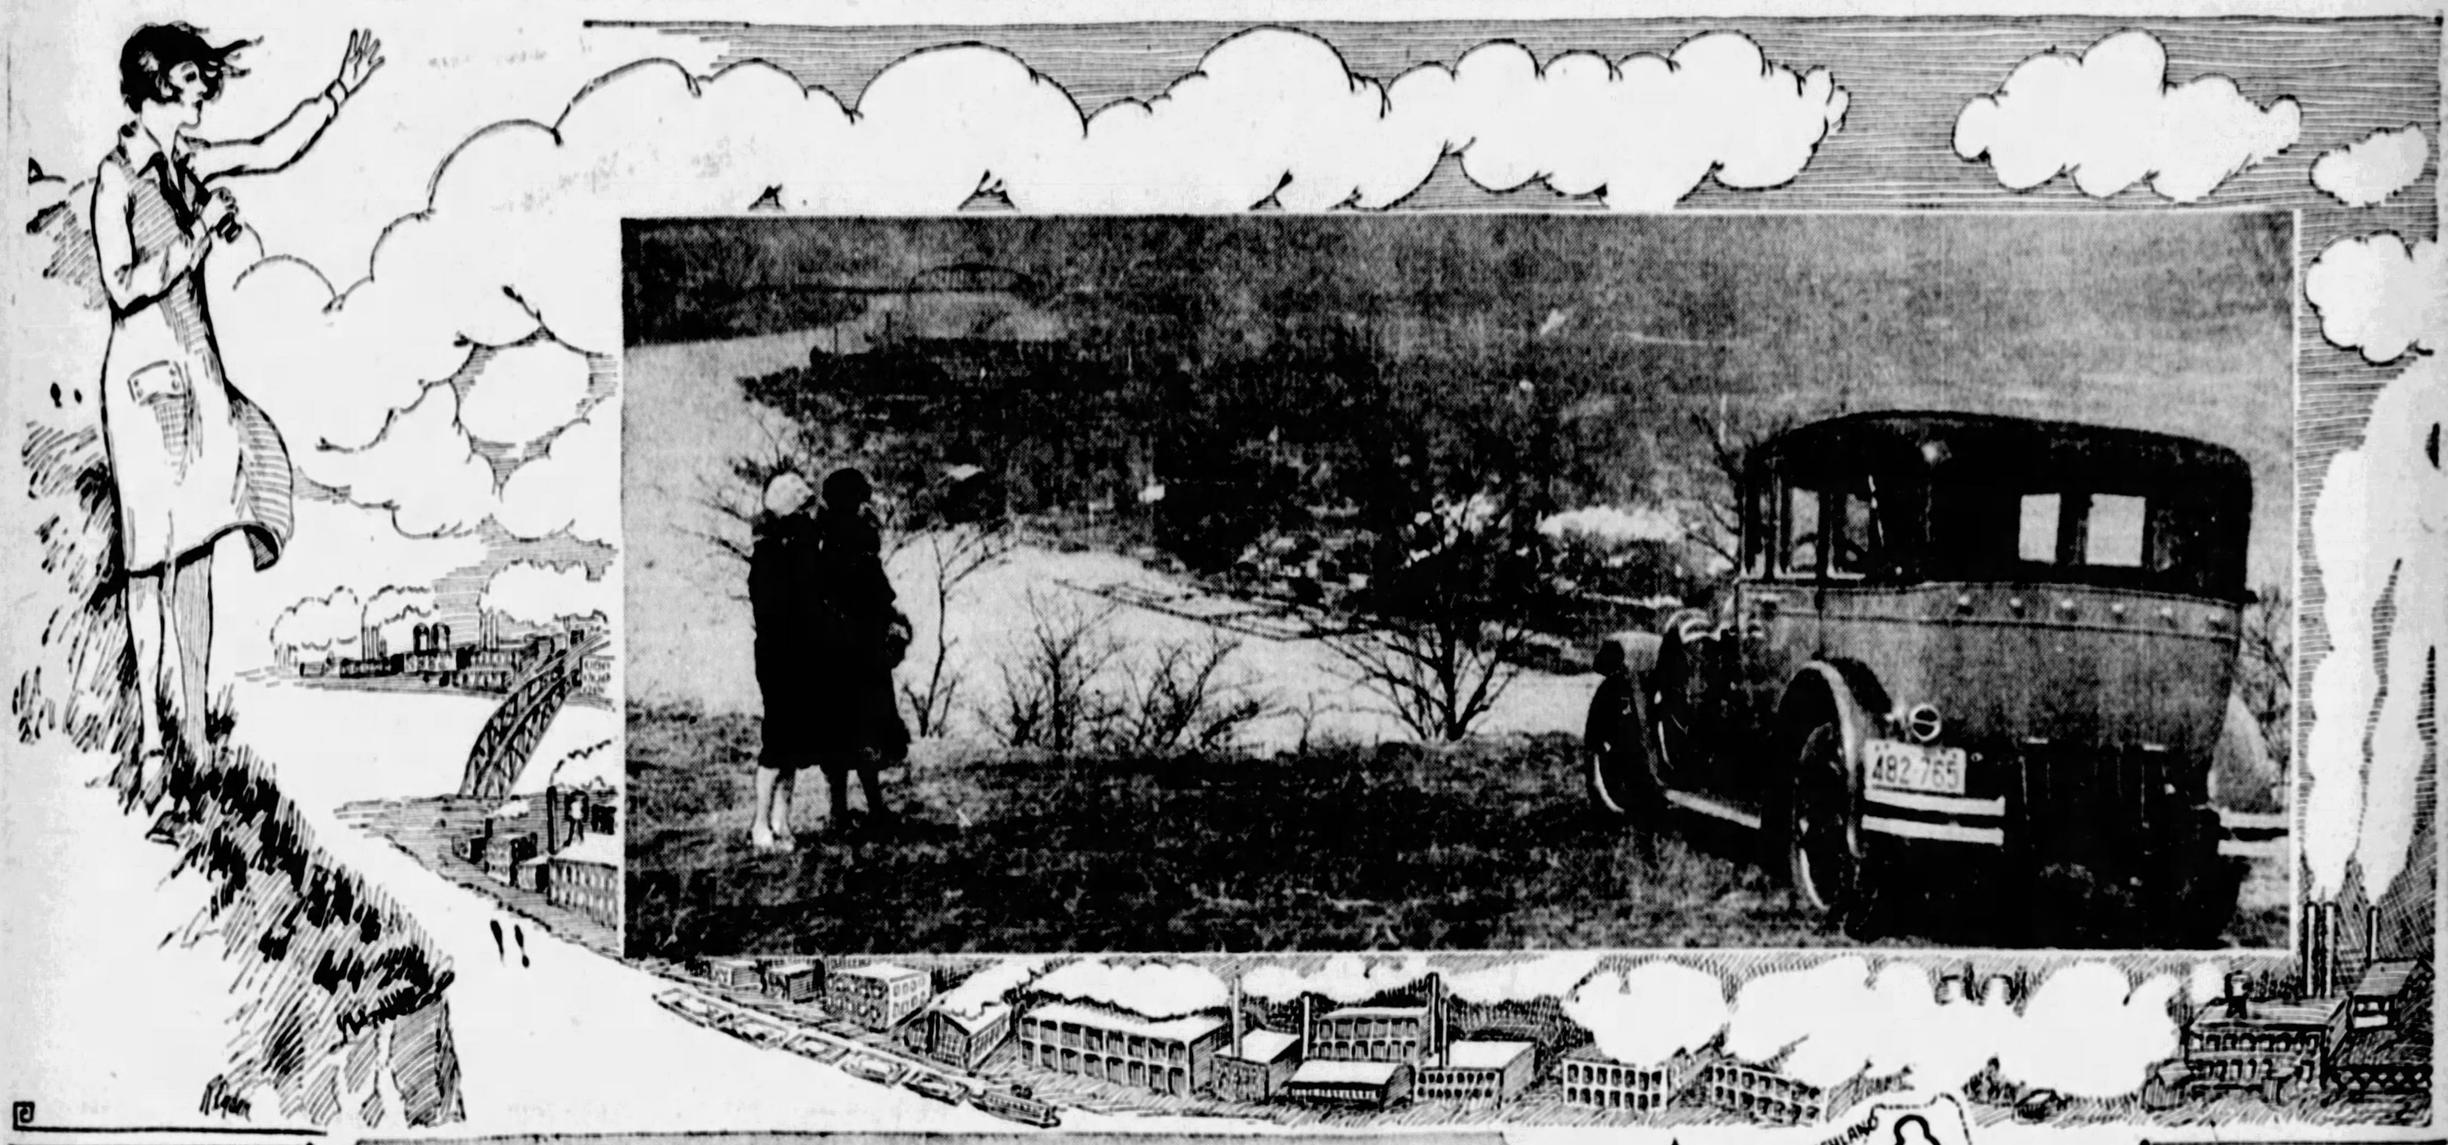
SAFETY-"SAVE-A-LIFE"-CAMPAIGN OPENS

FROM THE HILLTOPS .·. A SUN-TELEGRAPH MOTORLOGUE

Pittsburgh is a land unknown to many of its native sons, even though the regions to be seen from its hilltops are among the most famous in the world. Towering hills and long, narrow valleys as the setting for countless mills afford scenes that for picturesqueness are unrivaled. This week in a trip of about 52 miles the motoring tourists are taken to the sites of Pittsburgh's finest views, from hilltops overlooking industrial and homes districts covering many miles. The city's three largest parks are visited and the newest of bridges are crossed. The scout car used to map this trip was an Oakland All-American Six Landau Sedan, from C. A. Rehtmeyer, Inc. This route offers an ideal trip for Sunday afternoons.



WORLD FAMED VIEWS FROM CITY'S HILLS

Scenes Along Three River Vallies, Over Business and Home Districts Enchant.

By THE TOURING MORTORIST.

From the hilltops of Pittsburgh are to be seen the most talked-of lands of the world, and yet, to many who were born and are living their lives here, they are as undiscovered worlds.

Much of the picturesqueness of endless clouds of smoke from countless smoke stacks and long tongues of fire from gigantic furnaces has passed to neighboring boroughs in the march of progress, but a new and vividly colored skyline awaits those who will only seek. In spite of this progress the picture "Hell With the Lid Off," titled by a visitor of another year, can still be viewed from these hilltops.

In a spirit of adventure and exploration, the motoring tourist decided to make the trek over these hilltops for this week's motorlogue.

GAZE DOWN ON NEW BRIDGE

From The Sun-Telegraph Building at Gazette Square, the motoring tourist and his party traveled down Webster and Oliver avenues and over Wood street, through courtyards of industrial lords, to the Smithfield Street Bridge. Speeding up Brownsville avenue we paused for our first views of the city's skyline. Our appetite for scenic beauty whetted, we continued up Brownsville avenue to Warrington avenue, climbing Beltzhoover avenue to Grandview Park. Here we stopped to gaze out over the city and to look down upon the new Liberty Bridge, swarming with motor cars on their first journey over its broad roadway.

Returning to the motor car the journey was continued over Bailey avenue, past the Castle Shannon Incline, which at one time was the gateway to Castle Shannon and points beyond. Reaching Grandview avenue, we paused to drink deeply of the intoxicating scene of a city of skyscrapers massed between two rivers. From Duquesne Heights we thrilled to a view up the Monongahela and Allegheny vallies and a third down along the Ohio valley. Here is to be seen the city in all its glory and at night can be seen the bright glow of steel mills miles distant.

THROUGH SCHENLEY PARK

Returning to the city through the Liberty tubes and over the Liberty Bridge, we wended our way along the Boulevard of the Allies, from which can be had a good view of the South Side industrial district. Reaching Halket street, we turned to Wilmot street and Schenley Park, where we stopped to look about the log cabin home of another day. Continuing through the park, we circled to and along Beechwood boulevard, passing rows of beautiful homes to stop once more for a view of industrial Homestead across the Monongahela River, with Brown's Hill and bridge in the foreground. Having feasted on the scenic wonders here we directed our way to Highland Park, along Beechwood boulevard, Broad street and North Highland avenue.

The view from Bigelow Hill in Highland Park is one that will not be forgotten. From this point one can gaze for miles up the Allegheny River and a short distance up the river can be seen the city's filtration and water pumping stations, with the filtration beds in the background.

Turning from this scene we circled by the Zoological Gardens and decided upon Herron Hill Park as our next point of call. From this point, one of the highest in this district and the highest within the city, on a clear day can be seen lands more than 30 miles distant. And here bird's-eye views of the North Side, Lawrenceville, East Liberty, Oakland and Squirrel Hill are to be had.

Tiring of the view here, we returned to the car to continue down along Bigelow boulevard, cut into the hillside many years ago, to Seventh avenue, across the Ninth street bridge which with the neighboring Seventh street bridge are the first self-anchored suspension bridges in America. Continuing up to Cedar avenue and North avenue, we began our climb up Federal street and Perrysville avenue, where we gazed out over the lower North Side district, with its multitude of homes and industries.

Journeying out Perrysville avenue, we turned off and motored through Riverview Park, sight of the famous Allegheny Observatory. From Riverview Park we traveled to California avenue, over Davis avenue, where we enjoyed another view along the Ohio River. For our trip back to the city we motored along California avenue to Sedgewick street and down Allegheny avenue to the Manchester bridge, stopping to view the world-famous "Forks" of the rivers. Over Liberty avenue and up Oliver avenue brought us back again to our starting point.

In our journey we had covered about 52 miles and had crossed six bridges. We had also visited what are usually said to be Pittsburgh's three finest views, those from Mt. Washington, Bigelow Hill in Highland Park and Herron Hill. The streets traversed are all in fair condition, many of them among the best to be had and a few a bit rough.

Save this motorlogue! Another next week. Watch for it!

CAR INSPECTION FREE FEATURE OF STATE DRIVE

Governor and Mayor Issue Proclamations Calling on All to Join in Observance.

Pledging themselves to safety—sane driving and safe cars—the automotive industry and the automotive public Monday will join with the state and city in a four weeks' Safety—"Save a Life" — Campaign. Proclamations calling upon all to join in the safety observance have been issued by Gov. John S. Fisher and Mayor Charles H. Kline.

Thousands of automobile distributors, dealers and garages throughout the state have been banded to assist in making all motor cars safe to operate. In this district, automobile men, led by the Pittsburgh Automobile Dealers' Association, will provide free inspection service, at which faults which place a premium on the safe operation of the car will be pointed out and corrective measures outlined. Cars found safe will be provided with a signed windshield sticker.

TO OFFSET WRECK CAUSES

The Safety—"Save-a-Life"—Campaign has been designed by state and city executives and automotive leaders to offset two main causes of automobile accidents, so far as it is humanly possible. These causes are: The personal equation, careless, thoughtless, reckless ignorance of traffic laws or their utter disregard. The mechanical equation, poor condition of safety factors of motor vehicles—brakes, lights, horns, steering mechanism, windshield wipers, causing approximately 30 per cent of all accidents.

Safety campaigns similar to the one about to be launched in this state have been conducted with great success in New York, Massachusetts and Maryland. Through the campaign it is the hope of the campaign leaders to remove the accident cause by inspection of cars at reliable service stations, designated and appointed by the Pennsylvania Department of Highways, Bureau of Motor Vehicles, and demanding that cars found unsafe or unfit for operation be put in safe condition.

TAKE PLEDGE

Garage and service station operators who have received appointments as official motor vehicle inspection stations have pledged themselves to inspect carefully every motor vehicle presented for such purpose free of charge; to make required adjustments or repairs, when authorized by owners, at regular charges for such service; to use no undue means in soliciting such adjustments or repairs, and to issue inspection stickers only for motor vehicles which are found in safe condition. It is estimated that the time required for the inspection of each car will be 10 minutes.

Police officers will honor signatures of inspectors on the wind-

PLENTY OF LIGHT—That is there was plenty of lighting equipment on the cars of yesterday, but the equipment didn't throw much light. Here is shown O. E. Vestal in a 1903 Clement-Bayard, one of the first French cars in this city. This car was sold to Tom Harley of this city.

ON ROAD EVERY DAY—The owner of this 1912 Ford, Arthur V. Saylor, Connoquenessing, Pa., informs us that his car is on the road every day and in all kinds of weather. His car is not as old as others here but is of interest, because of the rear deck arrangement.

A HAPPY PARTY—Touring in cars like this one, a 1904 Pope-Toledo, built in what is now part of the Willys-Overland factory, must have been rather hard on the feminine hats which were the fashion at that time. The car was the property of G. E. Cain and was the second automobile in Barbour county, West Virginia. Note the bandage about the front tire.

BETTER VALUE TO COME WITH BY-PASSING

National Chamber of Commerce Secretary Optimistic After Visit to Detroit Factories.

By RAY PRIEST

DETROIT, March 31.—Assurances that 1928 will be a good year for the automobile industry and many reasons why are given by Alfred S. Reeves, general manager of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, who has just completed a two weeks' business trip to the various factories in and around Detroit.

Reeves cites first of all the heavy demand for replacements.

"Last year it required more than 2,000,000 of the 3,600,000 vehicles produced to offset cars that went to the junk pile," Reeves pointed out. He said that these figures had just been compiled by the New York office of the association and indicated that henceforth fully 50 per cent of the nation's automobile production would be needed for replacement purposes.

Among a universal demand here and abroad for transportation, he says that with the only 23,000,000 now in use a bright outlook continues for the motor trade.

While we may have seasonal dips and occasional recessions the motor industry will continue to grow," its official secretary believes.

"The problem today is not too many cars," Reeves says, "but too few highways. Men like Roy D. Chapin, John J. Raskob, Alvan Macauley, Arthur T. Waterfall and other leaders in the industry are taking a decided interest in directing activities toward traffic control and standardization, both here and abroad."

"Of great importance is our inability to use existing highways because of the lack of grade separations. Motorists in suburban districts on Saturday afternoon and Sunday, in most communities, spend nearly half their time waiting for traffic lights to change. Build more grade separations and you will get more value a dollar from your highways, more trade in your territory, and a quickening of the automobile industry. The highway movement fortunately is coming along steadily and we may look for real progress in that direction.

"This year will see some three-quarters of a million cars of American make purchased abroad, and it will not be long before there will be a million automobiles annually used outside of the United States."

Careless Drivers Smash $17,769 City Lamp Posts

ACCORDING to Nicholas J. Kelly of the department of water supply, gas and electricity, it cost New York City $17,769 to replace lamp posts hit by careless or drunken automobile drivers.

In Manhattan 345 lamp posts were ruined or damaged last year at a replacement cost of $10,295. Brooklyn's lamp casualties aggregated 134 at a replacement cost of $4,087, the Bronx 54, at $1,700, and Queens 27, at $1,695. In Central Park alone 105 posts were damaged or demolished last year by bad driving.

Reed Enters Field As Moon Distributor

George F. Reed, for six years distributor of Moon and Diana motor cars in this city, has just returned from Florida and has announced that he will again assume the distributorship of these cars in this territory. Mr. Reed will conduct business as the George F. Reed Moon Company, and has opened sales roms at Baum boulevard and Craig street.

Mr. Reed has gathered about him an entire new staff of executives for his new organization, which he founded at the urgent request of President Stewart McDonald, of the Moon factory. President McDonald recently invited Mr. Reed to the Moon factory and after a conference Mr. Reed was once again persuaded to re-enter the automotive merchandising field in which he has had 17 years' experience.

Assisting Mr. Reed will be F. B. Stockwell as retail sales manager, and George Lang, who has had 11 years' experience on Moon cars, as service manager.

Mr. Reed opens his exhibits with a new line of straight eights, the Moon aero type 8-80, which embodies many advanced engineering ideas including a duplex carburetor. The line, a distinct addition to the Moon family of automobiles, at present includes two models, the four-door sedan and the four-door close-coupled sedan, both of which are mounted on a 125-inch wheel-base chassis. Other models are now in production.

The bodies of the aero type 8-80, which were designed by a noted French engineer, are of the newest composite steel and wood construction and are designed with safety and comfort as cardinal requisites, says Mr. Reed. They typify the new Franco-Spanish school of automobile body design, coach work and interior decoration, as exemplified at the recent Paris and London shows, and of which the Hispano-Suiza is a n table example.

THREE TYPES OF CABRIOLETS

"One of the newest creations by Chandler, and one which is winning enthusiastic buying interest everywhere right now is the Chandler Cabriolet," states C. H. Kenney, of the Pittsburgh Motor Corporation, Chandler distributor.

"Feeling there is a definite demand existing for a motor car incorporating the many advantages of the roadster type of automobile, with the added convenience of closed car comfort, Chandler now is building a Cabriolet on the Royal Eight, Big Six and Special Six chassis.

"Custom built throughout, the bodies of the Royal Eight and Big Six Cabriolets truly bespeak the individual beauty of Chandler coachwork. Swung low, with tailored top and body contours blending into perfect harmony of composition, the Cabriolet wins admiration in the best of company on the boulevard, at the city club or country club," further states Mr. Kenney.

"Finished in sparkling duotone colors, with sportive equipment such as nickel bullet head and cowl lamps and landaulet arms, it is made a car of character, style and individuality."

WOMEN FAVOR NEW FRANKLIN

With the sale of the Franklin Airman seven-passenger models showing an appreciable increase in sales since initial introduction last fall, it is reported that the popularity these striking cars have attained with women drivers is definite proof that this type of car has an established position in the quality motor car field.

Franklin merchants throughout the nation declare that women who demand quality, luxury and utmost serviceability in their motor car have shown a market preference for the Airman seven-passenger model. It is pointed out that the ease of handling the seven-passenger models is comparable to smaller cars. This is effected, Franklin engineers claim, by the light weight of the Franklin seven-passenger cars compared with the weight and bulkiness of the older styled seven-passenger cars.

PUGH OPENING SIXTH STORE

Only one short year ago the great idea of the Pugh payment plan, original in selling automobile tires, was put into effect with the opening of a single small store, merchandising Goodrich Silvertowns, to see what the reaction of the public would be. The success of the plan is shown by the fact that within a single year four more stores have been opened; another one in Pittsburgh, and one each in Canton, Wheeling and Youngstown. And now comes another new member of the Pugh family, in Columbus, O., the new store opening Saturday of this week.

3,000 Stolen Cars Recovered in 1927

NEW YORK, March 31.—A total of 14,274 automobiles, having a value of $11,949,382, have been recovered since the passage of the national motor vehicle act, passed in 1919, American Motorists' Association statistics show. During the last fiscal year 3,000 cars, valued at $2,500,000, were recovered.

THEFT GUARD MEISEL OFFER

"Seven years ago when the Meisel Tire Company originated the '12 pay plan' it was revolutionary," states E. J. Meisel, president. "But that proved to be just a start in giving tire service. For 1928 two brand new features have been added that put a lot of extra joy into motoring. They are one year's free upkeep and one year's protection against loss by theft.

"The motorist nowadays has little to worry about," continued Mr. Meisel. "The three revolutionary features of service now in operation throughout our nation-wide chain of tire stores make it easy to own the best quality tires, protect the buyers against any further tire expense for one whole year and give one year's protection against loss by theft."

Eleven Ways Used to Assess Motor Cars

There are 11 bases on which the 48 States assess registeration fee on private passenger automobiles. Fourteen States base their rates on weight; seven States on horsepower, plus weight; one State on a flat rate per car; one State on the cost of a motor vehicle; one State on a cubic inch displacement; one State on value; one State on selling price, plus weight and horsepower, and one State on the manufacturer's list price.

Almost Half Tires Of Balloon Variety

Forty-seven per cent of the tires produced in 1927 were of the balloon variety, an increase of 13 per cent over 1926.

AIRMAN Series

Victoria Brougham

The most comfortable mile-a-minute car ever built

HOUR after hour you speed along—in comfort. You actually find yourself less fatigued after an all-day Airman drive, than after a three hour stretch in most other cars.

Immediately you ask, "Why haven't other cars ever achieved such riding ease, such engine smoothness, such supreme roadability?"

The answer is—because they don't have the Airman's full-elliptic springs—the Airman's flexible chassis—the Airman's scientific light-weight construction and a dozen other exclusive Franklin features.

Even at top speed you have no sense of engine strain, no desire to let up on the throttle. From the fully-balanced, seven-bearing crankshaft to the double fly-wheels, every factor known to engineering has been employed toward the reduction of vibration.

An air-cooled motor is a delight to drive . . . Let us tell you the amazing story of how air-cooling contributes to greater engine efficiency, greater riding comfort, greater ease of control, greater economy in fine car ownership, and greater roadability. Let us put a car at your disposal today . . . Payments out of income can be arranged.

IMPORTANT AIRMAN FEATURES

Air-cooling—the one efficient, trouble-free, economical cooling principle

Acceleration—the swift-darting, quick maneuvering of the pursuit plane

Synchronized 4-wheel hydraulic brakes—just a touch and you get action

Speed of a new kind—the world's fastest car in a day's run

Riding comfort—the most comfortable mile-a-minute car ever built

Larger motor—a wealth of power for any temperature, altitude or road condition

Engine smoothness—like the balanced purr of a turbine

7-passenger models—(128-inch wheelbase)—the up-to-date family cars—commodious and light weight

Advanced designs—having their counterpart in aeronautical engineering

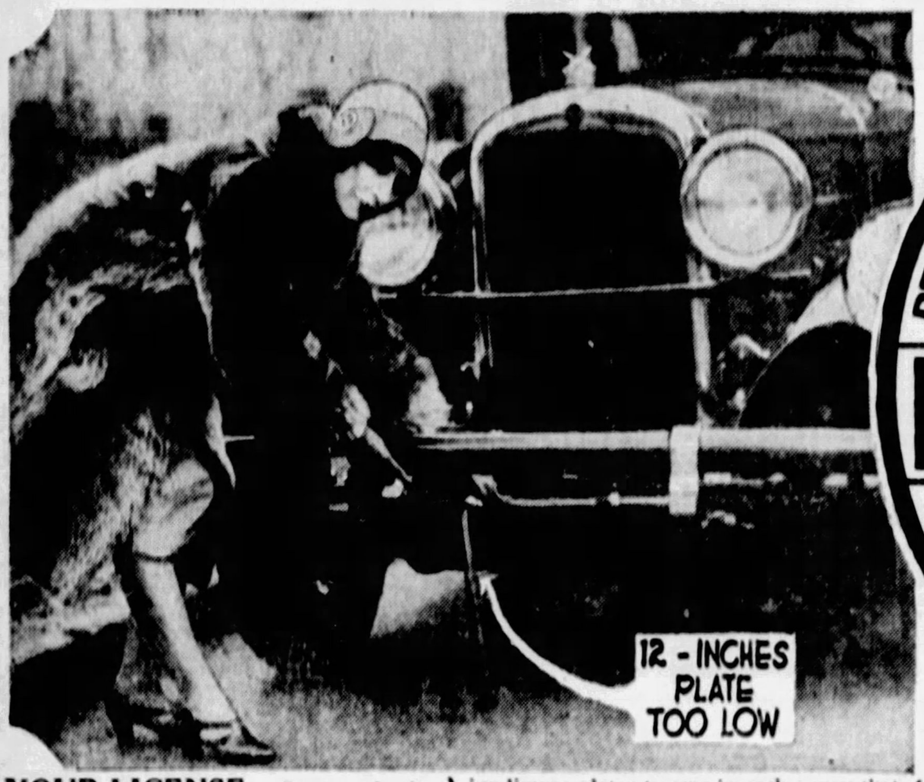
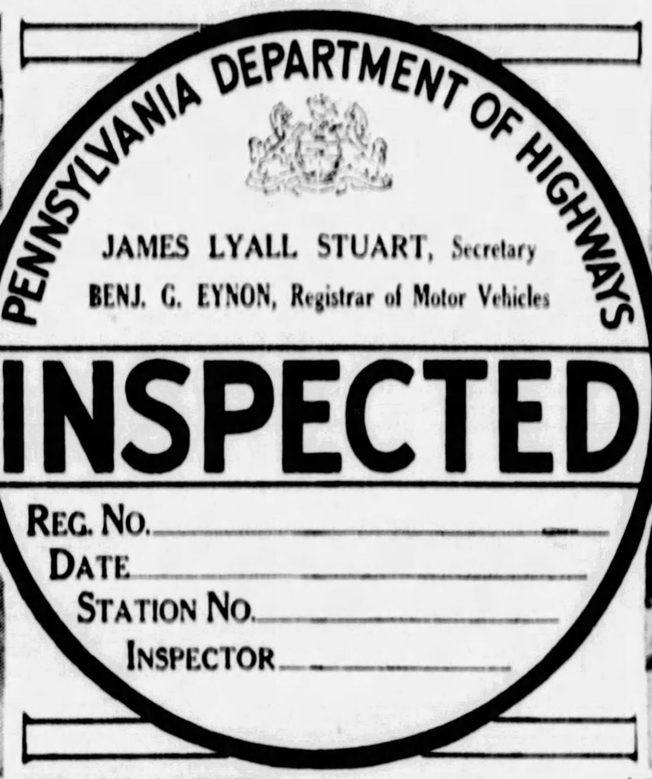
Governor and Mayor Urge Participation in Drive

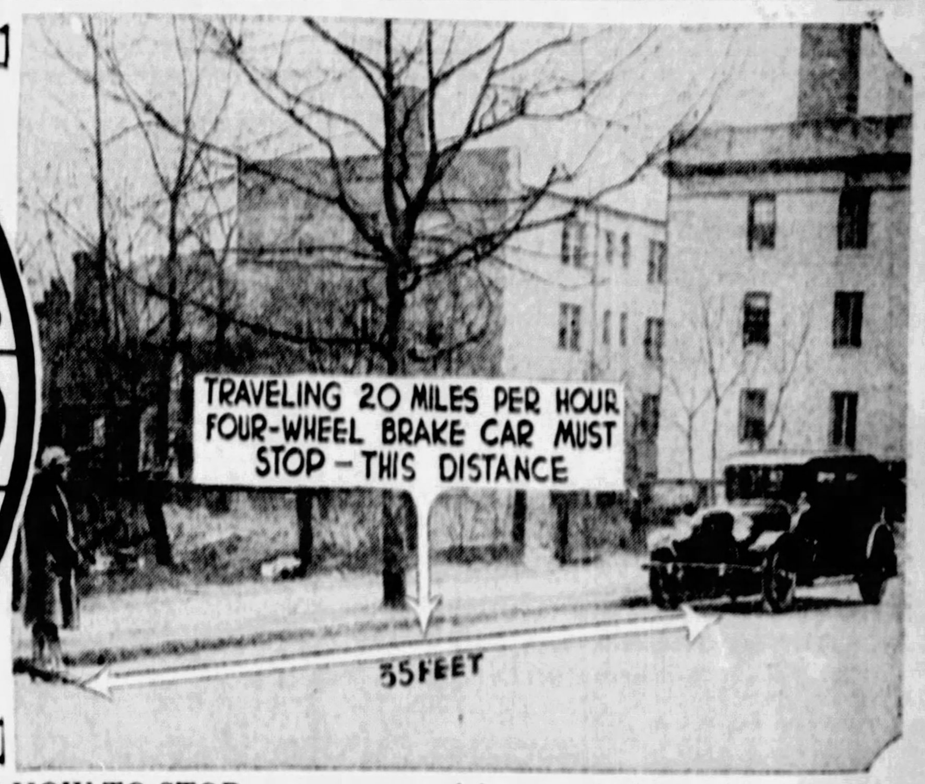
Protection for Motorist and Pedestrian Objective of State Campaign Throughout April



YOUR LICENSE—Part of the State's Safety—"Save-a-Life"—Campaign to be conducted throughout April will be directed to eliminating the practice of attaching license plates to cars in such a way that they cannot be read. The law requires that the plates shall be securely fastened to prevent swinging and at a height of not less than 12 inches from the ground.



MEANS SAFETY—A reproduction of the transparent sticker that will be provided car owners whose autos pass the free inspections to be made by official service stations as part of the State Safety drive. All are urged to participate.



HOW TO STOP—Traveling at the rate of 20 miles an hour a car with two-wheel brakes must stop in 50 feet and a car with four-wheel brakes within 35 feet, state motor laws say. At the same rate of speed the emergency brake must bring the car to a stop within 75 feet. The car used in this illustration was a Nash five-passenger Royal sedan from the Nash-Pittsburgh Motors Company.

CAR INSPECTION OFFERED FREE

shield inspection tickers, transparent and designed to comply with the motor vehicle laws, and will not molest drivers for "police inspection" unless circumstances indicate that further inspection is necessary.

LIGHTS MUST BE CLEAR

Details of the Safety—"Safe-a-Life"—Campaign free inspections at official stations, designated by posters, follow:

Brakes—Foot brakes, two-wheel brakes, car traveling 20 miles an hour must stop in 50 feet; four-wheel brakes, car going 20 miles per hour must stop in 35 feet. Emergency brakes, car going 20 miles per hour must stop in 75 feet.

Lights—Pennsylvania law requires 21-candlepower bulbs in headlights. Bulbs showing signs of blackening or a whitish discoloration inside the glass are inefficient and should be discarded. All bulbs which are burned out or missing should be replaced. Headlights must be of type approved by the Pennsylvania Department of Highways with bright reflectors and properly adjusted and focused. Tail lamps must have a red lens.

SIRENS TABOO

Horn—Press button and determine whether signal gives sufficient warning. (Sirens, compression or spark plug whistles, as prohibited by vehicle code, should be removed and replaced, except on fire, police or ambulance equipment.)

Steering mechanism — Wearing parts should appear to be sufficiently strong so as not to indicate any possibility of breaking under ordinary conditions, thus causing an accident.

Mirrors—State law requires motor vehicles to be equipped with a mirror so placed as to give rear vision when the motor vehicle is so constructed as to prevent the operator from obtaining a view of the highway to the rear by looking backward from the operators' position.

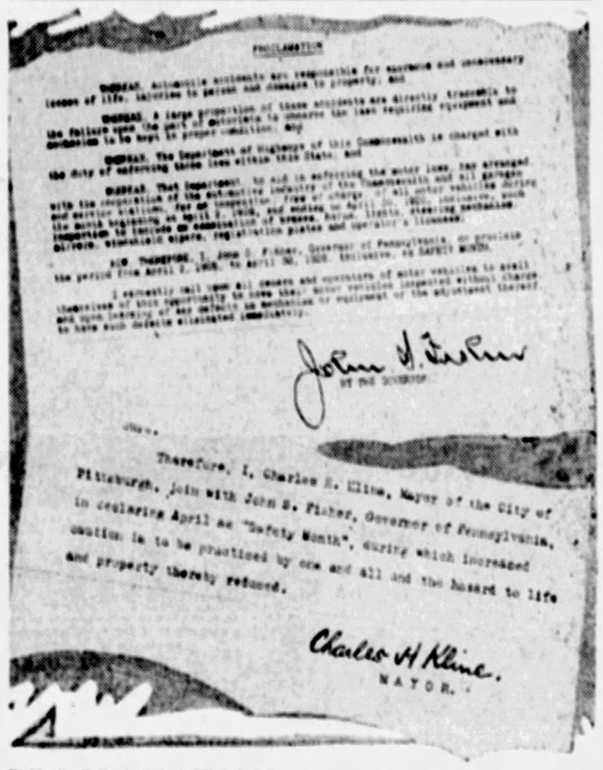
Windshield wipers—Test to see if hand or automatic wiper is installed and workable.

SWINGING PLATES BANNED

License tags—State law requires that every registration plate shall be securely fastened to the vehicle to prevent plate from swinging, one on the front and the other on the rear, and at a height not less than 12 inches from the ground, measuring from the bottom of such plate, in a place and position to be clearly visible, and shall be maintained free from foreign materials and in a condition to be clearly legible. Registration plates are not to be obscured by bumpers or other accessories.

Operator's license—Every operator must be 16 years of age or over and carry an operator's license or a learner's permit, which license and learner's permit must be signed by the holder. Minimum age, bus, 18 years, and paid operators, 18 years. Every operator must have a card—ask him to exhibit.

All for Safety



PROCLAMATION—Both Gov. John S. Fisher and Mayor Charles H. Kline have issued proclamations on Safety—"Save-a-Life"—Campaign, which opens Monday to continue throughout the month of April.

COL. LINDBERGH told a Congressional committee last Monday that "eventually" a transcontinental air-mail line, south of the present one, will be established. Our readers will remember that in last Sunday's column all the details of where this line would run were given. Arrangements have been made with the circulation department to return the colonel's dime.

Lindbergh also asked the committee to grant the congressmen and the government departments the right to use the air mail. Immediately a California congressman said that if this was done "a line will be established between Pittsburgh and Washington." That's another thing we predicted no longer ago than Sunday. If anybody wants a lot of information about this line, write and ask us. We've studied it.

As this is written the Germans are waiting favorable weather to try the Atlantic passage. We hope they make it, and somehow have a "hunch" that they will. Nevertheless we are in favor of a law prohibiting water crossings without emergency rations, pontoons, radio and a bridge. They're plain foolish. Look at Chamberlin. And HE did it when it meant something.

There's real interest in aviation now. It is time for the spectacular to end and for practical demonstrations to mount. There's genuine interest in it, right here in Pittsburgh. Out in an East End motorcycle shop Tuesday night, Jack Morris, the Rodgers Field instructor-commercial pilot, gave his first ground lesson to this 1928 class of students. There were 40 there, ready and anxious to learn how to fly. Last summer he graduated only 15.

Jack Smith is going to stop going to California for awhile now, even though several new Ryans are ordered from Mayer Aircraft Corporation, Bridgeville, of which he is general manager. "There are so many students and so much flying here I haven't the time to go," he said.

The New York-Atlanta air mail line will begin operations early in April, according to the Department of Commerce, which is finishing up its installation of 78 beacon lights along the route. They will be less than 10 miles apart, but as we remember, they'll need 'em. It's over one of the roughest stretches of country in the United States. From Virginia almost to Atlanta it's mountains and while they are not as high as ours in Pennsylvania, they're even more rugged.

The Postoffice Department is planning to ask for bids on another route from Atlanta. It will connect with Chicago and the first 400 miles from the southern metropolis are just as rough as from here to New York. But it's one of the "feeder" lines that will pour traffic into the transcontinental route that's going through Pittsburgh. All the California mail from Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Kentucky will empty into it just west of Pittsburgh.

Jack Smith, who had just come in from San Diego with the new "Pride of Pittsburgh," put in a busy afternoon at Mayer Field. And Carl Litzenberger, Smith's assistant, did a "dawn-to-dusk" passenger business in one of the new Travelair open planes which fill up the Mayer Field hangar. Most of them, though, are privately owned—several by students Smitty taught last year.

Congressman Magee, who is running for the seat again this year, is a lieutenant colonel in the Air Corps reserve. He was the principal speaker recently at the Aero Club's weekly luncheon and from the applause he's certain of all the "flying" votes anyway. That is, if any of the fliers are registered.

* * *

C. Bedell Monro's application for a certificate of public convenience, to operate his Pittsburgh-Harrisburg-Philadelphia-New York mail and passenger line, comes up before the Public Service Commission April 2. Just now Mr. Monro is gathering information and statistics to present to the commission. If his application is granted, service will begin probably late in the spring or early summer.

* * *

Barr Peat and Lester J. Hendershot are back in Pittsburgh. Barr said he was here to proceed with the management of Bettis Field, in which for the last three years he has made an enviable record.

"Did you see Col. Lindbergh in Washington?" we asked him.

"Yeh," he answered, "saw him carrying passengers."

Neither Peat nor Hendershot had anything to add for publication regarding the "fuelless motor." The reason Lindbergh "got mixed up in it," they said, was because Col. Henry Breckenridge, their attorney, also is personal counsel to the flying ace.

World's greatest Value and Outselling all sixes

THE world's largest sale of 6-cylinder cars became an Essex achievement solely because of merit.

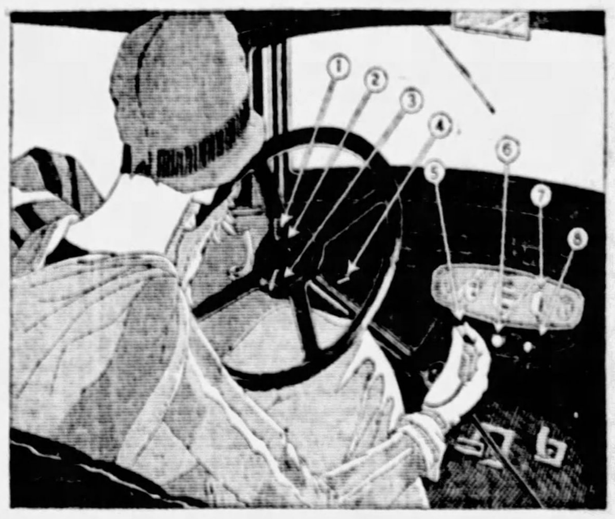
All 6-cylinder sales records are swept aside in the enthusiastic reception everywhere accorded the New Essex Super-Six. Many communities report 100%, 200%, even 300% greater sales than for the corresponding period of last year, which was the former all-time Essex record.

The ideal transportation achieved in the Greatest Essex Super-Six was long foreshadowed in the series of individual superiorities by which Essex towered above the field. Its vivid brilliance of performance reveals in a single ride a smoothness and quiet, a road-skimming ease and soaring exhilaration that is actually like flying.

Greater in power, more versatile in all performance, large, roomier and more beautifully appointed, the New Essex Super-Six gloriously earns its richer reward in even greater popularity than its predecessor.

The exclusive, high-compression Super-Six motor that turns waste heat to power, develops the greatest power per cubic inch of piston displacement of any stock motor we know in the world.

In all ways the New Essex Super-Six is engineered to the lowest operation and maintenance costs. And increasing thousands of owners rolling up thousands of miles of service prove that these qualities which delight you on your first ride are just at lasting as they are brilliant.



Simple, Compact and Convenient
1. Light control - 2. Horn button - 3. Throttle
4. Radiator shutter control - 5. Starter - 6. Electro-lock
7. Gasoline gauge - 8. Choke

The beautiful Essex instrument board is of ebony finish, grouping under indirect light, thermometer, gasoline gauge, oil gauge, speedometer and ammeter. Restful seating position with convenience, and operation ease of all controls, assures easiest driving you ever knew.

Studebaker Over Top In March Sales Drive

"One hundred thousand dollars more than $1,600,000, the greatest amount of business we have ever done in a single month," was the report of G. D. Jay, Jr., sales manager, on the March million-dollar sales campaign conducted by the Studebaker Sales Company of Pittsburgh, at the close of the campaign Saturday night.

Employes of the Studebaker organization were divided into two competing armies for the campaign, and a tabulation of business will be made the first of this week to learn which of the armies was the victor. A banquet and celebration, marking the successful conclusion of the drive, is to be held in the salesrooms of the company on Baum boulevard Tuesday, April 10. Among the guests of honor will be Paul G. Hoffman, vice president in charge of sales; J. M. Cleary, sales manager, and F. A. Overlook, treasurer of the Studebaker Corporation.

Each afternoon and night of this week the Studebaker Sales Company will stage an exhibition of deep sea diving in a large tank on the showroom floor. C. C. McWilliams, the diver, will spend three hours each afternoon and a similar length of time each night in the tank. At the end of the week Mr. McWilliams expects to enter the tank in an attempt to establish a new under water endurance record.

NEWEST TYPES CONFORM WITH CLOSED BODIES

Focusing Screw Makes Lights Easy to Adjust—Reflector Requires Greatest Care.

By AN AUTOMOTIVE ENGINEER

Better lighting arrangements are being used on the present run of cars. Not only are the lamps more attractive in appearance, but they are better finished and the lines conform to the lines of the car more harmoniously than they did formerly. One reason for this is that the manufacturer has a greater range of shapes to choose from and in addition there have been some marked improvements in the methods of focusing and in mounting the bulbs.

The tilting reflector giving a choice of a high or low beam, the two-ray lamps and other types that accomplish very much the same purpose in different ways make night driving more pleasant than it formerly was, although as far as the glare problem is concerned, we still have that with us and will probably have it for years to come.

There are some further developments being worked upon that will be very valuable if they pan out as the inventors believe they will. One of the most interesting of these is the Neon gas bulb. It seems that when the bulb is filled with neon gas instead of nitrogen or hydrogen, the ray of light is affected in some way which permits it to penetrate fog. We have been troubled, in certain parts of the country, with more fog during the past year than we have had for many years past. There have been times when it has been dangerous to attempt to drive through the impenetrable blanket of mist. A lamp that would pierce the fog cloud, permitting a driver to go along his way in safety would be a great boon to the motorist. It is claimed such a lamp will soon make its appearance.

It is now possible to focus the ordinary type of headlamp simply by turning up on a screw. In former years it was necessary to take off the lens in front and slide the bulb back and forth. The focusing screw is generally on the back of the lamp. In focusing the lamp, remove the glass in front, turn up on the adjusting screw until it shows a clear round spot of light without black spots or irregularities in shape. When the lenses are in place and the lamps are correctly focused the light should be a smooth elliptical shape with the long axis of the ellipse horizontally disposed.

The 1928 cars are using the acorn or bullet nose shape lamp far more than they are the drum or cylindrical type. The reason for this is that the lines of this type of lamp conform to the closed type of car very nicely. The lamps are lighter and when the cowl lamps are used, as they are on some of the larger cars, it is far better to have all the lamps acorn shape than it is to have the drum-shaped type, as they seem to blend better with most bodies.

Spring Style Trends Buick Show Theme

Spring fashion trends, in smart motor cars, will be interpreted for the public at the Buick style show, to be held in the showroom of the Buick Motor Company, at Baum boulevard and South Aiken avenue, throughout this week. The event, which is being held simultaneously in cities all over the United States, is in keeping with the heavy emphasis placed upon style in motor cars today.

The application of style ideas to automobiles will be illustrated by an exhibit of new Buick models, dressed in resplendent spring colors and displayed against a background of spring decorations.

"Style is exerting greater and greater influence upon the design of automobiles," said R. H. McVicker, manager of the Pittsburgh branch, explaining the exhibit. "In our style show is exhibited a line of cars which we believe to be the smartest available today. They are low-swung and graceful, harmonious of line and color. It is our conviction that they represent the loveliest motor car creations available anywhere.

"The keynote of the style show is color. Decorations and the cars themselves express the gaiety which we associate with spring. There are greens and blues, maroons, grays and browns, in rich, lustrous duco—an array of tasteful combinations which we believe is unmatched anywhere. The display will continue all the week, evenings as well as day times, and everyone will be welcome."

AN AUTO EXHIBIT—C. C. McWilliams who will give an exhibition of deep sea diving in the show room of the Studebaker Sales Company of Pittsburgh, Baum boulevard, each afternoon and night of this week.

SUCCESS LIES WITH DEALERS

While the 1928 cars continue to disclose important advancements in automobile design and construction, the importance of the local dealer as a factor in owner-satisfaction is becoming more and more evident, says Dulsdia Young, Hupmobile president and general manager.

"The public has definitely reached the conclusion that every car built must have service from time to time, and that that service will, in the long run, more than pay its cost in owner satisfaction and continued dependable operation," he says. "The dealers establishment through which the car was bought is the logical place for that service, and the dealer who sold it must assume his entire share of responsibility to the owner.

"Natural results of this fact are the establishment of bigger, more adequate dealerships and more enduring satisfaction in motor car ownership."

Over-Confidence Found Cause of Many Accidents

SELF-STYLED EXPERTS FLIRT WITH DANGERS

National Auto Club Bulletin Says Skill Evidenced Only By Ability to Avert Wrecks

"Super-confidence" in their ability to drive an automobile and to avoid danger by their skill is declared to be the source of many accidents to the best of motorists in a bulletin recently issued by the National Automobile Club to its membership as part of its "safety first" campaign in 1928.

"Many drivers," says the bulletin in part, "believe themselves to be so competent behind the wheel that they are apt to take unnecessary chances, thus frequently bringing deaths and injuries in their wake.

"These drivers consider themselves experts and as their apparent skill increases and their taking chances fails to cause accidents, their confidence in their ability mounts. It finally reaches a point where they consider themselves above all the laws of probability.

"It is at this point that the stage of 'super-confidence' is reached with the inevitable result. It must be manifest to the most casual observer that expertness in driving is not evidenced by an avoidance of accidents by a matter of mere inches, but rather by the anticipation of the possibility and then taking timely measures to prevent their happening.

"The 'super-confidence complex' is one of the most frequent sources of fatal accidents. This is brought out by the study of many of the accidents in this state. It is shown that in most such cases the cars of the 'super-drivers' were not under such control that the avoidance of an accident was made possible.

"It is revealed that this is chiefly the case in accidents at highway intersections which the 'super-drivers' are inclined to approach at too high a speed with the result that a collision is merely a matter of course. In such cases the 'super-confidence' of one or both the drivers was responsible."

AMERICA MAKES BETTER TIRES

Despite the fact control of the world's rubber supply is held by British, Dutch and other foreign interests, Americans are making the best use of the commodity.

"That is to say," declares "Jim" Campbell, of Campbell & Co., General Tire distributors in Pittsburgh, "that rubber products, and particularly automobile tires produced in this country are greatly superior to those produced in foreign countries.

"This fact is plainly evident in a recent report by the chief engineer of the Birmingham and Midland Omnibus Company, Ltd., of England, on bus tire performance. The report gives mileage figures and makes much ado about tires on the English busses which delivered an average of 15,000 miles.

"The report says," continued Mr. Campbell, that during the last five years 7,800 covers (tires) have been used on these busses and that of these 80 per cent of them failed at mileages of 10,000 to 20,000. Others went less than 10,000 miles.

"In contrast to this, it is well known in the rubber industry that American bus operators are receiving above 20,000 and closer 30,000 miles from their tires. Report on General bus tires now in use in Erie, Pa., Des Moines, Ia., Atlanta and other cities show these tires to be delivering an average of 33,435 miles for their owners."

Even Flat Tires Sometimes Show A Nice Big Profit

LIKE other motorists, R. M. Smith, of Delhi, N. Y., cussed because of a delay caused by a flat tire, but was agreeably surprised to find a small diamond the cause of his trouble. Evidently lost from a ring, it is appraised at about $40.

OLD SALE PLAN USED FOR TIRES

While selling tires on the installment plan is a comparatively new practice it is proving a popular method of merchandising, according to A. E. Hertzig, Goodyear branch manager here.

Quoting Dr. W. C. Plummer of the University of Pennsylvania, Mr. Hertzig said that installment buying is an old practice, but that its growth has come largely during recent years and that its expansion has been unusually large during the last six or seven years.

"About 1915," Mr. Hertzig said, "installment selling was introduced into the automobile business, where it experienced a somewhat gradual growth for several years. The system gradually spread to other lines of business and grew rapidly to the large proportions of the present time.

"So, when a motorist buys tires 'on time' at our service station, he is not establishing a precedent. Millions of others have bought articles on this convenient basis."

NEW THOUGHT IN HUDSON DOOR

A new and interesting development—said to improve both appearance and performance—is announced in the 1928 Hudson Super-Six deluxe models, now on display by J. R. Pierpoint, Hudson-Essex distributor. This step forward around a feature of design which hitherto has not been greatly noticed by body engineers—the doors.

"For this series of deluxe cars, Hudson designers went after three major points," said Mr. Pierpoint. "First the doors should be permanently silent. Second, they should assist a distinctive and modish appearance. Third, they should be staunch and weather-tight.

"The usual idea of an automobile door," said Mr. Pierpoint, "has been to build it heavy and strong, and to fit it closely and snugly to the body—the closer the better. But in these bodies another line of thought altogether is followed. The lower half of each door is of standard design—heavily constructed and fitting tightly—but above the belt line the structure consists only of a strong but slender steel frame to hold the window glass in place.

"The doors close against a hollow springy rubber tubing, with no metal-to-metal contact whatever. A quarter inch clearance is maintained between the outer edges of the door and the door jambs. The door is thus literally insulated from the body, yet a tight and permanent joint is assured."

Paris Motorists Adopt Panther (Skin) Mascots

THE newest mascots adopted by motorists in Paris, France, are life-sized panthers. Genuine skins are softly stuffed so that the animal looks alive as it lops over the arm of an elegant Parisian or sprawls on the cushions of her motor car. The high cost of panther skins is expected to assure the exclusiveness of the mascots for some time.

AEROTYPE —with "WHITE FLASH HEAD"

By All Odds The Car of the Year!

By STANLEY MOON

BY all odds, Moon-Aerotype is the car of the year. No less sweeping assertion will do. Moon-Aerotype is an entirely new concept in automobiles, anticipating your finest desires for a fine car and fine car performance.

Moon-Aerotype takes its design from the highest development in aircraft practice. It has lifted bodily much of the engineering and many of the ideas that assisted Lindbergh, Chamberlin and Byrd in their great trans-Atlantic flights. It has required twenty months of intensive effort to produce the Aerotype, and now that it is here, its performance is conceded to be nothing short of an engineering sensation, an automotive triumph.

To-day, wherever men gather you'll hear them discussing the High Compression Aerotype with its mysterious "White Flash Head," and the new Anti-Knock construction with patented Dual Carburetion and Bohnalite steel-strut aluminum pistons. They have stopped theorizing, stopped guessing. Moon-Aerotype brings the answer. And, I'll venture that when posterity is asked to name the six great episodes in The Development of the Motor Car —the Era of Aerotype will be one of them.

Again, not to be outdone, not to be content with anything short of complete perfection, Moon engineers journeyed to France and picked the reigning Paris designer to model The Body Beautiful. And here it is, the very newest French body with the latest flair in French radiators — mounted on the Aerotype chassis.

Now come and try them out on your favorite hill or highway —the Aerotype Eight does eighty miles an hour, the Six makes seventy-two — demonstrations every hour on the hour.

Sound and Economical Operation Demand of Trade

OOD SALES NECESSITY FOR FAIR PROFIT

cellent Purchasing Power, Indicated in Many Sections to Influence Industry.

ETROIT, March 31.—A new enaisam regarding the automotive ustry appears to be slowly, but ely being aroused, according to H. Cram, industry authority. To what factor this is due would hard to say. Probably it is due a number of factors. Perhaps it he result of the waiting attitude buying public assumed last r. Perhaps it is due to the attive models introduced this year owest prices. Undoubtedly it is in part to an underlying optism with which the general busi- situation is regarded.

course it is too soon to know what the industry will accomh in 1928. Certain trends appear e taken for granted. There has enough speculation and foreing. Results are now being ited, and if the industry can uce these it will have definitely ved a very great thing—not for f alone, but for the country at e. For confidence is built on idence and every stone conted to this pyramid makes the cture that much the stronger.

NEED FOR RECORDS

it to get back to results. What t the industry do—what must it mplish in 1928? Must produce records be broken? Must new records be established? If e things are necessary, disappintment will be great. There is no of setting new records. The thing—and it is a large order at is required of the industry, is d and economical operation and keting so that profits for the ers will be equitable and earnof the producers will guarantee r return on invested capital.

be sure, a good sales volume be necessary in order to realize a satisfactory outcome. Perales are most important for form the key to production, h is in turn the basis of operefficiency. And it is doubtful y one thing has directly conted more to the stabilization of ings and quality of product the progress the industry had e in lowering the cost of proion in the last few years.

hether or not sales in 1928 will reater than in 1927, we cannot It is reasonable to expect that will. Whether or not they will reater than 1926, or 1925, it also possible to predict. But it does reasonable to expect sales to a sufficient volume to assure tisfactory result for the indus- this year.

brief analysation of the factors h will unquestionably influence in 1928 might not be out of at this time.

st of all, automobile sales are ndent chiefly on one factor—hasing power or purchasing ty. Desire has been taken for ted, and the matter of utility an economic standpoint also be assumed.

e entire matter, then, works to one prime consideration: oney is easy and purchasing r is assured, the automobile ess will be good.

rchasing power during 1928 will xcellent in certain sections of country. It may not be quite so in others. From present indiions the agricultural areas, pararly the Northwest and to some its the South, will offer the outding markets for cars this year. he same time many other deoments will influence sales. e include building and conction, which always provide for y employment and so create ng power. Steel and other inrial activity react to building farm prosperity, and according- rchasing power is found in the strial centers.

Battery-Oil Engine Used in New York

A hundred years ago, when the first steam locomotives puffed their way past astonished and skeptical spectators, smoke had not become a nuisance. But today it is a problem in almost every fair-sized as well as large city.

New York, according to C. S. Coleman, of Iron City Electric Company, local Exide dealer, has just received a large and very unusual battery-oil electric switching locomotive, the first of its kind in the world, through which, it is expected, at least part of the smoke problem will be solved.

It was bought by the New York Central for use along the famous West Side freight yards. For those unfamiliar with this section of New York, it will be explained that it borders on the Hudson River.

Through these yards pass much of the food, besides other commodities, consumed by the people of New York. In fact, the West Side freight system of the New York Central is basic to the life of the city.

The new locomotive, which is nearly 50 feet long, is a product of designs by the New York Central's electrical engineering department under the direction of E. B. Katte, chief engineer, and H. A. Currie, assistant electrical engineer, working in combination with the General Electric Company, the Electric Storage Battery Company and the Ingersoll-Rand Company.

This locomotive is self-contained, a it carries its own power plant wherever it goes. All that it needs are tracks to run upon and fuel and lubricating oil for the engine.

When the locomotive is standing or doing light work, the battery is being charged from the power generated by the oil engine. Accordingly, when an unusually heavy load is encountered, the tremendous power of the battery is available.

Annoying Knocks, Their Messages

When a heavy pounding of a loose crankshaft or a muffled sound of a loose connecting rod is heard, the former is an indication that the main bearings are worn, while the latter is the tell-tale of worn piston pins or bushings. A main bearing knock will show up on a heavy pull, uphill or when starting. A connecting rod knock will generally be detected when the automobile is coasting or just after slowing down while the car is pushing the engine.

Scenic Auto Route For Glacier Park

One of the most scenic drives in the world will be afforded motorists driving over the new highway now being constructed in Glacier National Park across the Continental Divide.

The new road, which will be open to traffic within a year or two, extends up above the clouds in places, and from it tourists will be furnished an extraordinary view of a thousand peaks as they motor along the Garden Wall of the Rocky Mountains.

Rickenbacker, ace of aces in the American flying forces during the World War, more recently vice president and director of sales of the Rickenbacker Motor Company, and recently appointed assistant general sales manager of the Cadillac Motor Company in charge of LaSalle sales, will visit Pittsburgh next Saturday. The announcement was made by McAlister Brothers, distributor here of Cadillac and LaSalle cars.

From the outset of his new connection, Mr. Rickenbacker has been spending the greater part of his time in the field, as he has done in his previous automobile activities. The present tour is for the purpose of getting acquainted with the Cadillac-LaSalle organizations throughout the country.

His business meetings in Pittsburgh will be with members of the McAlister Brothers' sales, service and used car force, and distributors and dealers from the surrounding territory.

Patricia Pitt Says:

"Post-Easter Season Will See Some Very Interesting Nuptials"

THIS being Palm Sunday, there is, naturally, just one more week of Lent, and who shall say that life then will not be a little more interesting, socially speaking? There are several very interesting weddings scheduled for the post-Easter season, at least.

Our society folks are slowly gravitating northward, although a few have elected to remain in the southern warmth for a while longer. I hear that Mrs. Alexander Laughlin has bought a cottage at the corner of Atlantic avenue and North Ocean boulevard, adjoining her Palm Beach estate. This gives Mrs. Laughlin an unbroken ocean frontage for "Whitehouse" and the other cottage between "Whitehouse" and the Clarke residence, which she purchased two years ago.

Mrs. Laughlin's grandchildren, Madeleine Alexander, Laughlin Alexander and Charles B. Alexander II, are in Palm Beach now, spending their Easter holidays with their father and mother, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Maitland Alexander. Another granddaughter, Mary Franklin Robinson, daughter of the William Christopher Robinsons, is also visiting Mrs. Laughlin over the spring vacation. Mrs. Laughlin and the Alexanders expect to start home on Tuesday, I believe.

Mrs. Henry R. Rea probably will remain at Palm Beach until about April 15. Her daughter, Mrs. George Andrew Benney, the former Edith Anne Rea, is now spending a few weeks with her husband in New York, and she expects to be in Sewickley some time during April. Mrs. Rea will, of course, spend some time at her Sewickley Heights home, too, before going to her summer place at Southampton, L. I.

April Wedding

ONE of the pretty April weddings will be that of Elizabeth Stevenson, daughter of the William McCurdy Stevensons, of Denniston avenue, and William Bryce McQuiston, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Curtis McQuiston, of Bartlett street, which is scheduled for April 10. Elizabeth has just announced her bridal party. She has asked her sister, Rachel, to be her maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be another sister, Sarah, and Harriet Barker. Stuart McQuiston is to be his brother's best man, and the ushers are to be John B. Stevenson, brother of the bride, and Albert Diss, of Cleveland.

It is to be a home wedding, I understand, and the hour set is 8 o'clock in the evening. The Rev. Dr. H. H. Forsyth, pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church, is to perform the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. John B. Barker, of Smithfield, O., a cousin of the bride.

Engaged in West

FROM out in California has come the announcement of the engagement of a former local girl, Helene Hostetter, daughter of Mrs. D. Herbert Hostetter, to John Stevenson Griffith, son of the John Tomlinson Griffiths, of Los Angeles. The Hostetters formerly lived in Fifth avenue here, but for several years they have maintained a home in New York and have spent their winters in Pasadena, Cal.

MISS MARION GAYLORD has also returned to Pittsburgh from school and expects to be with her family for the spring vacation. She attends Skidmore College.

AN INTERESTING event of yesterday was the morning musicale held in the home of Mrs. John E. Nelson, in Murtland avenue, the third in the series of musicales being sponsored by Mrs. Taylor Allderdice and a group of her friends. These affairs seem to be constantly growing in popularity, and a fourth is being planned for Tuesday, May 1, in Mrs. Allderdice's home in Wilkins avenue.

The program yesterday was a delightfully varied one,

ANOTHER KNICKERBOCKER GOES TO HER FINAL SLEEP

Mrs. Wainwright, 90, Knew Her Society; Rated "Great Lady"

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER
(Registered U. S. Patent Office)

NEW YORK, March 31.

THE recent passing of Margaret Livingston Wainwright removed from our midst a great lady and one of the last of the Knickerbockers.

Almost 90 years old, Mrs. Wainwright had lived through many social revolutions on Manhattan Isle. She had seen the decline of the Knickerbockers and the elevation of the great multi-millionaire families to the social pinnacle. At her finger tips she had the ins and outs of the older regime and to the last she evinced a deep interest in society.

All of which was not surprising, for she was born a daughter of Nicholas W. Stuyvesant, a direct descendant of Peter Stuyvesant, whose early dealings with dear old Injuns netted him no less a realty holding than Manhattan Isle. Mrs. Wainwright married twice. Her first husband was John Howard Wainwright, and her children by him included Stuyvesant Wainwright, Jr., Mayhew Wainwright and Richard T. Wainwright. After his death she married William H. Catlin. He died some 17 years ago and the great aristocrat resumed her first husband's name.

Bows to Lady Diana

MY TOPPER is off in a profound salute to the beautiful and democratic Lady Diana Manners, who never has been overly impressed with the fact that she is the daughter of a duchess. Lady Diana sailed last week for London, and while she had been honored with an avalanche of bids to "farewell teas" scheduled for the day of her departure, Lady Diana "chucked" them all to sip Oolong in—of all places—a Childs' restaurant. I hope the hostesses turned down by Lady Diana will immediately ascertain the brand of tea served at "The Temples of Calories."

Bermuda Visitor Back

"TOMMY" Tailer is back from Bermuda and so enthusiastic is T. Suffern about the climate, social life and golf courses on the British island possession off our Southern coast, he plans to erect a cottage there, next to the winter home of his friend, C. Ledyard Blair, who, incidentally, appears to have pied-a-terres scattered here, there and everywhere about the universe.

For three weeks at Bermuda the gentleman who has done much to revive the old glories of Newport and whose fondness for yellow is displayed in everything he possesses, from waistcoats to motor cars, played golf daily. If all the people in Bermuda be invited to tramp over his famous ocean links at Newport next summer put in an appearance out in the vicinity of Brenton's Point, there will be a constant chorus of "Fore, please," echoing from Milton J. Budlong's drab looking villa to Bailey's Beach.

"Tommy" Tailer is one of the kindliest and most hospitable of men—but those Bermuda tourists must not take his invitation to "come to Newport" too seriously.

Accompanying Mr. Tailer on the return trip from the island, where hundreds of Easter lilies now are in bloom, were Mrs. Tailer, daughter of that most interesting lady, Mrs. Alexander Brown, of Baltimore and Newport; Betty Tailer, last winter's grade A debutante, and young "Tommy" Tailer, Jr., who handles a niblick, mashie and putter like a veteran.

The Tailers will be at their Plaza apartment until June, when they will migrate to the attractively named, and even more attractively situated, "Honeysuckle Lodge" at Newport.

Bride at Recent Wedding

MRS. CHARLES BLAKE JEWELL was Miss Elizabeth McKim George, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louise E. George, of Swissvale, before her marriage March 14. Mr. and Mrs. Jewell will make their home in St. Louis.

"Lord Window Pane"

ONE cannot help but notice—provided one is privileged to wander at random through Mayfair these Lenten evenings—that the British Mr. Humphreys is almost constantly on view in the foyers and restaurants of the Ritz-Carlton since the return from the Pacific Slope of that statuesque—and wealthy—widow, Mrs. Adolph Spreckels. His presence may be significent, and then again it may mean nothing at all. With Andreas de Segurola happily content out in California's movie world, Mr. Humphreys holds all monocle records. In fact, recently at Palm Beach, Mr. Humphreys was known as "Lord Window Pane" by those who could not remember his cognomen.

Mrs. Rogers Abroad

MRS. HENRY H. ROGERS, after a more-or-less quiet season at Palm Beach, now is en route to the Old World, leaving Harry and her well-advertised daughter and new son-in-law, the Arturo Ramoses, here on Manhattan Isle.

For once Mrs. Rogers slipped away without her departure being widely exploited in the prints, and I rather imagine the lady is duly grateful. For the last seven or eight years she has been so constantly photographed it must be a relief to wander about without the reporters barking at her dainty heels and camping on her trail.

One thing is certain, Mrs. Rogers will not be Count "Ludy" Salm should they happen to meet in Paris. "Ludy" is nothing short of poison ivy to Mrs. Rogers. Also I doubt if any pleasantries will be exchanged between Mrs. Rogers and her stepmama, Grace Tremaine Benjamin, whose Parisian mailing address for several years has been the Crillon Hotel.

Grace and Mrs. Rogers' late father had been separated ever since they relinquished the quaint old dwelling down in West Eleventh street and some months ago when George Benjamin died, his widow claimed her stepdaughter had failed to notify her of Mr. Benjamin's death. For a time a lawsuit over Mr. Benjamin's estate was threatened, but I believe the Rogers held a trump card in the small allowance Grace had been receiving from Mr. Benjamin.

I, for one, can testify, that Grace did much to assist the Benjamins and Rogerses at the time Beatrice Benjamin Pratt eloped with Preston Gibson and Millicent Rogers first gained front-page fame by her unceremonius marriage with "Ludy" Salm. For years afterwards, Grace Benjamin flooded her friends in the New York newspaper world with letters sent from Paris begging them "to be kind to my husband's family."

Now poor Grace is being practically overlooked by "my husband's family."

It seems I have heard something about Mrs. Rogers having bought an estate in Italy. If my memory does not play me false I presume she will migrate there after giving the Paris shops her usual order for new and resplendent finery.

News of a Wedding

FROM Paris comes the news that the ill-advised alliance of Helen Bailey Rueping and Albert Gould Jennings, Jr., has developed into one of those "on-again off-again" affairs. Gould's mother, Mrs. Grimmins Jennings, has long been heart-broken over her son's wedding and subsequent happenings. Helen Jennings rarely sees her old-time metropolitan cronies—Ida Adams and "Katty" Armstrong—except when those two ladies brave the Atlantic and enjoy a vacation in Paree.

Stork Drops In

THE long-legged bird dropped a precious bundle at the Nursery and Child's Hospital the other day and, as a result, the Le Grand Lockwood Redfields are in line for congratulations on the birth of a son and heir.

Since their marriage, last June, down at the Virginia Hot Springs, Le Grand and the former Catheryne Watson, daughter of Mrs. George Matthews, have been making their home at No. 101 West Fifty-fifth street, and the unpleasantness that followed young Redfield's first matrimonial venture—perhaps adventure would be a more descriptive word — with Mary Schoemaker has been forgotten.

Mary and Le Grand were secretly married back in 1926. About a year later Mary, to the accompaniment of headlines in the newspapers and numerous interviews with the sob-sisters, demanded $300,000 from Le Grand's papa, the Social Register-terized Charles Snowden Redfield, claiming the latter looked upon her as an unwelcome daughter-in-law, due to her obscure ancestry, and was responsible for Le Grand's love having reached that certain frigid point. I seem to recall that Mary also claimed Le Grand's parents were anxious for him to marry a society girl from Hot Springs, Va.

Mary's emphatic statement, "there will be no divorce," ended with her securing a decree in Paris in January, 1927, and, as soon as he was legally free Le Grand replaced Mary with Catheryne. As to that request for more than a quarter of a million, much mystery always has surrounded the settling of the suit.

However, Mary expressed herself at the time the action was discontinued as being "satisfied."

So, with Mary "satisfied" and a son and heir about to take possession of the nursery in the Le

Daniel Winters Will Give Final Talk of Season

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

THE school of politics, the very successful new venture conducted this season by the Allegheny County Council of Republican Women, will be brought to a close on April 10, when Daniel Winters, a member of City Council, will talk on "The Workings of the Organization and the Mechanics of a Local Election." This meeting will be held, as have its predecessors, in the Congress of Clubs, and will be open to all women. The first lecture, which was given in January, was on "Political Parties" and was by Miss Sara Soffel. In February Mrs. Jean MacIlroy Whitmyer, of State Teachers' College, conducted an institute on "The Judiciary of the State," while last month's talk was by District Attorney John D. Meyer, who spoke on "The Presidential Year."

The Pennsylvania Council of Republican Women, of which the Allegheny County Council is the local unit, is organized in almost all of the 67 counties of the state and represents one of the strongest, most active groups of Republican women in the country, having had a membership of more than 20,000 since its organization in 1923.

Fulfilling its chief objective, which is "To act as a clearing house for Republican women's activities and to provide a center for political education, legislative information and practical service," it goes without saying that the organization is a valuable one and is striving to realize its leaders' desire to see women working in conjunction with organization heads. Additional objectives are to increase the number of women registered and enrolled in the Republican party and to secure equal representation for women with men on state and county committees within the party throughout the state.

Council Represented

The part women are playing in the world of politics and the places they are reaching form an interesting commentary on the growth of their achievements and possibilities. The only woman delegate at large to the presidential convention in Kansas City, Mrs. Marion M. Scranton, the vice chairman of the state committee, is a vice president of the state board and former state treasurer of the council. The council is well represented among the alternates at large by Mrs. Barclay H. Warburton, president, and Mrs. Augusta Brown Fleming, Mrs. Charles F. Stauffer and Mrs. Hannah Durham, each a state council officer. In the congressional districts of Allegheny county are two members of the council who will represent their districts at Kansas City—Mrs. William T. Todd, of the Fourteenth Ward, and Mrs. Adam Rote, president of the Fifteenth Ward Council. There are also other positions in the coming elections for which local council women have filed papers. Mrs. Sarah H. Gardner, president of the Knoxville Library Club, is seeking a position in the Legislature and Mrs. Fernada Frazier has filed papers for election to the state commitee, a position which she has held since the enfranchisement of women.

Membership Varies

In the 24 units functioning in this county, the membership varies from 20 to 100, but all are planning a spirited part in the spring campaign. The county president, Mrs. Clifton A. Verner, is constantly speaking, not alone in her own county, but has visited in Indiana, where a bond of helpful co-operation has been built up between the two counties.

MOTOR-DRIVEN SHIP'S FIRST TRIP SUCCESS

Thousands Greet California as She Arrives in Pacific Ports of United States.

The new electric liner California, of the Panama Pacific Line of the International Mercantile Marine Company, met with a great welcome in California ports when she arrived there on her maiden voyage recently. The electric drive worked perfectly throughout the run.

Six days out of Panama, the ship was off the coast of Lower California, a region of high bare mountains of marvelous coloring. The ship was approaching the invisible border line of the United States and crossed it late at night. In the morning she touched at her first Pacific Coast port, San Diego.

Steaming into the harbor, the California found that fame had preceded her. Acres of parking space near the shore were filled with automobiles. School children, with flags, were gathered at the pier.

P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine, was on the ship.

The California entered the port of San Pedro, the harbor of Los Angeles, the same evening. Thousands were massed along the quays. All the ships in the channel turned loose their whistles and the fire boats threw fountains of water from every available hose.

Off the Wilmington piers, the California turned in her length and was neatly berthed. The ship was presented with a handsome silk banner, the bear flag of California.

The ship made the run from Los Angeles to California in less than 10 hours. There the scenes of San Diego and Los Angeles were repeated. Honors and entertainment occupied a large part of the five days spent in San Francisco. A feature was a radio program in which Winfield M. Thompson, field agent of the Panama Pacific Line, was the principal speaker.

Word has been received by E. E. Cole, general agent for the lines in Pittsburgh, that another Cunard oil-burner will be sent around the world as a "floating university," sailing from New York October 6. The ship will be equipped with a complete university library and will visit 26 countries. Japan will be reached during the coronation of the Emperor in November.

You'll never know how good ginger ale can be until you drink "Canada Dry"

You say, "I've been drinking ginger ale all my life." And you have. Last week you tried this brand. Last month you tried some other. A year ago it was still another. And so it goes.

You say you've been drinking ginger ale all your life. But have you? As a matter of fact, you'll never know what real ginger ale is . . . how good ginger ale can be . . . until you try "Canada Dry."

Made from real Jamaica ginger

For this ginger ale is a beverage in the truest meaning of the word. It has body to it. It has distinction. Once you taste this fine old ginger ale, you could tell it anywhere. Just as the connoisseur can readily distinguish the various kinds of ports or burgundies or champagnes from one another . . . just as some can even tell the vintage of a wine to within a year . . . so can you always distinguish the true flavor of "Canada Dry."

It is only the finest things—the best of their kind—that are ever imitated.

Years of painstaking effort, experiment after experiment, disappointment after disappointment, discouragement, and then, at last—a real product—the premier of its kind—is created.

Almost immediately, imitators with sham products enter the field to ride the waves of success, at the expense of the real product.

Imitators can duplicate the emerald and gold package and other details; they can copy methods. But they never can and never will duplicate the inherent quality of "Canada Dry"—the champagne of ginger ales. It is inimitable.

The real product always wins

The mere fact that attempts are being made to imitate "Canada Dry," is proof of its superiority. We have faith in the American public, who can always be depended upon to recognize the real from the sham.

CANADA DRY

Don't accept substitutes or imitations.

In 1927, 89,829 passenger cars were handled, as against 72,886 in 1926. The most impressive feature was the increase in the number of foot passengers transported—12,373 in 1926 and 163,658 in 1927. August was the largest individual month, as in all previous years, over 29,000 cars and 54,000 foot passengers being transported in that period. This ferry is but one of several gateways to West Michigan.

The same organization has arranged a number of other summer tours to Europe, traveling tourist third cabin.

Tourists Not Chasing Game Back to Wilds

Tourist travel in the mountains of Jasper Park, is not frightening game farther back into the hills but is serving to bring it into areas of the park which it never before visited. Maligne Lake, the greatest glacial body of water in the Canadian Rockies, is cited as an instance. Here, in former years, animals were rarely seen. Now many bears come to pick up the leavings from the tourist chalets, while moose and deer are also becoming more plentiful.

BRITISH ROYAL FAMILY BUSY PICKING EASTER GIFTS

Prince of Wales Selects Gloves To Present Queen

By GERTRUDE LADY DECIES,
Universal Service Special Cable.

LONDON, March 31.

Queen Mary has been busy shopping this week before leaving Buckingham Palace for Windsor Castle, where she will pass Easter with King George and the other members of the royal family.

From one confectioner, the queen carried away a giant Easter egg, which she had ordered especially for her granddaughter, Princess Elizabeth.

The king's Easter gift to the queen will be a small, brocade egg containing pendant sapphires, her favorite jewels, and the Prince of Wales has planned to give his mother a similar egg. Very much larger and containing a dozen pairs of long white gloves.

The latter are coming back into fashion, for the queen and her ladies in waiting have worn them on several occasions lately. And, of course, society is following suit.

Americans Guests

Sir Gerald Du Marier, famed actor, gave a dance at Berkeley this week at which American guests were almost as greatly in evidence as were stage stars. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Miller, the latter formerly Miss Bache, of New York; the Earl and Countess Sandwich, and Mrs. Gilbert Green, of Chicago, were among the guests. Previous to her marriage Countess Sandwich was Miss Alberta Sturges, of New York. She wore a three-tiered gown of green sequins, knee length in front and almost touching the floor at the back. Her fan of ostrich tips had a beautifully jeweled handle.

Is in Florida

MISS FLORENCE FORD, of Wilson avenue, North Side, who, with her mother, is spending the winter at El Jardin, Cocoanut Grove, Miami, Fla. They will return in April.

Races Draw Many

This week, two of the most important races of the year have been decided, and more prominent Americans than ever seem to have come over for the events. Most of them made their headquarters in London, traveling northward on the days of the races. After the Lincolnshire Handicap on Wednesday a large number seemed to have got back to Claridge's in time for supper dancing.

Well-known American sporting men I saw included Stephen Sandford, "Jock" Whitney, A. C. Bostwick and Henry S. Crane, of New York, who was with his sister, Edith. Lady Bamford Slack, in a dress of gold leaves and her hair in a tightly waved Eton crop, was dancing with John G. Waterford, of Chicago.

Collecting Craze

Fashionable London has been swept with the collecting craze during the last two weeks, and nothing seems too bizarre or trivial to catch the fancy of smart society women. Lady Robert A. Garnett, formerly Miss "Dolly" Sherman, of New York, is collecting cigaret holders of all sorts and unusual shapes. Wednesday afternoon she gave a party to collecting friends, all of whom were asked to bring their respective collections with them.

Lady Alastair Innes-Ker, formerly Anna Breeze, of New York, displayed lovely samples in her collection of Oriental shawls, while Lady Lancaster came with her unique assortment of medieval rings. Other guests brought tea caddies, daggers and even saxophones and doorknobs.

"Magic" Pockets

Vanity bags concealed in bouquets of real flowers are among Dame Fashion's latest fads. Women are carrying flowers almost wherever they go in the evening, and while the blossoms are real the leaves usually are made of silk, which in turn forms a receptacle for handkerchief, lipstick, etc.

In fact, some of the debutantes are like conjurors this season, with many concealed pockets about them. Miss Virginia Salmons, of San Francisco, came to the ball at Lady Howe's house the other evening with one of the new bouquet bags, with a tiny watch concealed in a pocket of her stocking and with her cigaret case hidden in the flounce of her dress.

Another popular vogue with Belgravia is new chain-mail jewelry. This takes the form of a collar as much as a foot wide, made of tiny links of gold and platinum and liberally jeweled.

Mrs. Wells to Be Hostess to Club

MRS. A. B. WELLS, of McNeilly avenue, will be hostess tomorrow afternoon to the music department of the Dormont New Century Club. Current musical news will be discussed by Mrs. B. B. Byers and Mrs. Norman T. Davy will talk on foreign-born American musicians. Mrs. G. H. Young and Mrs. Clarence Sloan are to be assistant hostesses. On Tuesday afternoon the home economics section of the club will visit the Reick-McJunkin plant.

Homewood Women Going to Lecture

MRS. O. N. EISAMAN, Mrs. E. E. Myer, Mrs. R. W. Beattie and Mrs. W. E. Crim are to be ushers for tomorrow's meeting of the Homewood Women's Club which will be held in Carnegie Institute. Luncheon in the cafeteria will be followed by an illustrated lecture on "The First People of America," delivered by Arthur S. Coggeshall, curator of public education.

Chairman

MRS. I. WILLIAMS is chairman for social service day being observed today in the Y. M. and W. H. A. by the Ladies' Hospital Aid Society.

Author To Speak To Club

MRS. ALICE VAN LEAR CARRICK, authority and authoress, will speak on "Period Furniture" before the Twentieth Century Club tomorrow morning. The remaining open date for the month, April 16, will be filled by Lord Dunsany, the Irish playwright. Dr. Frank Bohn's current events talk will be given next Monday, and the lecture season will be brought to a close with Margaret Widdemere's talk on "Poetry" on the twenty-third.

Star's Daughter Hostess at Party

RICHARD BARTHELMESS' little daughter, Mary Hay Barthelmess, recently celebrated her birthday with a party at which many other children of the movie colony were guests. They were entertained by trick animals, famous in the movies.

West View Forum Meets Tomorrow

THE regular meeting of the West View Forum will be held tomorrow evening at the home of Mrs. A. H. Wilt. Roll call will be answered by "Humorous Stories." Mrs. H. P. McKown will give a paper on "Gettysburg," and Mrs. P. A. Maxwell one on "Reclaiming War-ridden Europe" and the music will consist of a piano solo by Mrs. R. W. Hill. The leader will be Mrs. W. Zander and the associate hostess, Mrs. W. G. Hayward.

Shops Have Variety To Suit Individual Tastes of Buyers

IF YOU haven't yet bought the toggery that is destined to make its first appearance next Sunday, you have no need to worry about "catching the current mode." Uniformity is a thing of the past, and you will find that the shops have such a wide variety of lovely things to select from that you will have no difficulty in suiting your own taste.

To be sure, there are certain tendencies in style that are more or less followed in all the new spring clothes, but individuality in dressing is stressed just a bit more this season than formerly. Skirts, you will find, are full, as a general rule. Perhaps they fall in a soft, "fluttery" line, or they may suddenly flare forth from a fitted hip line in an almost exaggerated fashion. You may see the flounce that is just coming back after a good many years of neglect, or the necessary fullness may be supplied by a well-placed ruffle or two. Circular inserts, godets, puffed effects—they sound almost medieval, but they are all good this spring. The pleat, of course, has been "in" for a long time, and nothing can quite take its place. It is an absolute necessity to the sports frock.

Not So Simple

You must select your dressmaker with some care this season, you will find. These ruffled and flounced effects sound simple, and, of course, it is a simple matter to manufacture either. But — and that "but" is quite a big one—to place a ruffle on a dress and still maintain the chic of that dress is quite another matter. Describing a frock whose skirt has wide flounces and dips down in the back makes one think of the little country miss with her dimity dress. But when that frock has been made by a master hand, it is, to say the least, smart.

The newest position for this fullness of skirt is at the back, and you will find that the fullness is always accompanied by a moulding of the hip-line. The upper part of the frock may be supple and the skirt may flare, but it fits closely at the hips. Another new point, too, that is to be found in this silhouette is the fire-tree effect given by the broken surfaces. The cascaded or draped effects are very frequently produced by a layer-like treatment, with one plane emerging from another.

Any Coat Length "Good"

You might just as well select the coat length which is best adapted to your figure, too, because this spring any length is

"good." There are lots of caps and cape effects, also, but these are not worn well by every type of figure. The straight-line effect is usually more flattering.

It should be easy to guess, after a glance through the shops, that femininity is really important in this spring's mode. Not to the point of fussiness, of course. Nothing is deliberately "fancied" with an afterthought of jabot or bow-knot. But softness and graceful draperies are emphasized everywhere, with lines falling naturally into flying panels, fluttery ends and cascades of material. The circular cut has never been more in evidence than it is this year, and that always lends itself to easy grace in line.

Ensemble Popular

One hears a hint here and there that skirts are a little longer than they have been, most particularly in the evening. They are certainly much wider, and just a bit of added length is almost compulsory when so much drapery and so many flounces are used. Then, too, the effect of length is frequently given by the dip that almost invariably is placed at some point or other in the skirt.

There is no need in telling you, I know, that the ensemble is immensely popular. The plain coat and the print frock is most widely used, perhaps, but there are all sorts of interesting combinations. And speaking of combinations, a great deal of wool jersey and printed crepes are being used together in frocks, which is novel, to say the least.

Paris says that the waist-line is being raised—with the additional note that this is by no means an invariable rule. Quite a number of girdles reach the normal waist-line at some point, and for afternoon and evening, it is said, that the smartest line starts high in the front or at the side and slopes low at the back in a curving line. It must be noted that this higher waist-line is seldom continued all the way around, but is usually found drooping hipward again at one point or another. It is a graceful, fluid line, isn't it, from the normal waist down to the fitted hips from which the fullness sweeps to the slightly longer, uneven hem?

Taken all in all, the woman who dresses well should find everything to her taste in the spring mode. She may suit her individual style and still know she is chic.

Whitneys at Aiken

TO THEIR credit let it be said the Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitneys have added much to the social side of life at Aiken this season. "Sonny's" wife has been the pacemaker in the giving of dinners and dances, and the Whitney cottage has been "Liberty Hall" to house guests. Incidentally, the older element is panic-stricken over the invasion of Aiken by New York climbers. They fear a repetition of Palm Beach. That there were many strange social mixtures at Aiken this season cannot be denied. Even the Hugh Murrays and Pauls made the grade after Palm Beach failed to be impressed with Hugh's snappy tailored effects.

Girls of Trinity To Give "Irene"

Banquet Planned By B. P. W.

THE Pittsburgh Business and Professional Women's Club will celebrate national B. P. W. Week (April 16-21) by holding a banquet at the Fort Pitt Hotel the night of April 16. Miss Emily R. Kneubuhl, national executive secretary, and the state president, Mrs. Helen W. Schluraff, of Erie, will be present to speak. The Pittsburgh club has two members on the state executive board, Miss Anna A. Adams, state treasurer, and Miss Ella King Vogel, state chairman of publicity, who was recently appointed by national headquarters as chairman of publicity for the national convention in New Orleans the week of July 9.

World Court legislation will be one of the issues discussed by the National Federation at the annual convention. The Federation has been asked to indorse the renewal of conversations between the United States and other countries who are now in the World Court and the request will be presented to the convention at New Orleans by National Legislation Chairman Martha Connole, of East St. Louis, Ill. Another matter to be presented to the convention for legislative action is a request from the Woman's Overseas Service League for assistance in securing an adequate appropriation for the retention and re-establishment of the army hostess at every Army post. The federation will also determine by vote whether it will be one of the organizations participating in the work of the national committee on the Cause and Cure of War.

The most important phase of the organization's legislative program this year has been a vigorous campaign to secure an increase of exemption for single persons under the federal income tax law, a matter that will be kept continuously before the public. Representatives of the federation who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on November 3, to seek this exemption, were the first women ever appearing before the body on a tax matter.

League To Hear Debaters

DISCUSSION of "Children in Industry" will be continued at a meeting of leaders of the League of Women Voters in the Congress of Clubs next Thursday. Miss Beatrice McConnell, assistant director of the Pennsylvania Bureau for Women and Children, and Miss Marie Maloney, head of the employment department of a local store, will speak in the morning. After luncheon the debating team of the University of Pittsburgh will be heard in a discussion as to whether woman suffrage has been a political benefit to the United States.

The April meeting of the Penn Township League will be held on Tuesday evening in the Thad Stevens School. A demonstration of the small voting machine will be given by Mrs. Elizabeth B. Motz, after which she will talk on the amendments to be voted upon in the November election. Mrs. John O. Miller, state chairman of the League, will address the Pittsburgh Advertising Club at a luncheon Friday in the Nixon restaurant on "Issues of the Coming Campaign."

Women of Press To Honor Visitors

MRS. ELIZABETH HOBE BURNELL, a former president, and Mrs. Mary Blair Thompson, two out-of-town members of the Women's Press Club, will share honors at a luncheon which the club will give in the Woman's City Club tomorrow. The luncheon will precede the usual business session.

Schedule Players' Contest

THE fourth annual amateur players' contest of the Pittsburgh Drama League will take place April 17, 18 and 19 in the East Liberty Carnegie Library. All the winning groups in last year's contest will again compete for the prizes, give cash awards and the Samuel French trophy, to become the permanent possession of any group which succeeds in winning it three times.

The Puppets of Pittsburgh, who are now in possession of the Samuel French trophy, will defend their right to the cup by presenting Rita Creighton Smith's "The Rescue," a study of the psychological influence of an unfavorable heredity upon a neurotic girl. The cast will consist of Miss Olivia Kelly, Miss Margaret Murray and Miss Rita A. Cristie.

Carl Glick's "Outclassed," a rollicking comedy reminiscent of Booth Tarkington's stories of boy life, will be given by the Gargoyle Society of the Shady Side Academy, who received high praise for their work in the third contest. The play will be given by William Miller, Alexander Hill, Edward Davidson and George Acheson under the direction of Ray E. Hurd, director of dramatics in the Shady Side Academy.

Woman's Club Next Meeting Tuesday

MUSICAL numbers and a current-events discussion will make up the program for the Woman's Club of Pittsburgh at its meeting Tuesday afternoon in the Congress of Clubs. Under the chairmanship of Mrs. J. C. Schreiner Mrs. S. C. McCorkle will give the current events, and Mrs. Charles Barnhart, soprano, will sing. Miss Marie Hinkle, pianist, is accompanist, and Miss Miriam Schoenfeld will read.

Dormont Mothers Hear Soviet Talk

THE members of the Dormont Mothers' Club heard Miss Mary Condon, of the Associated Charities, tell of her recent trip through Russia, and Miss Nancy Lowe, Travelers' Aid executive, tell of her work in Turkey, at Tuesday night's meeting. The New Century Club trio, composed of Miss Phil Franklin, Mrs. J. O. Orbin and Mrs. Allen Wells, sang several numbers, and John G. Koruzo, violinist, was accompanied by Mrs. C. G. Louis.

Daughters of 1812 Vote School Gift

THE March meeting of Dolly Madison Chapter, United States Daughters of 1812, was held on Monday afternoon at the Woman's City Club. An unexpected pleasure was the attendance of Mrs. Francis H. Wade, of Cambridge, Mass., a member of the chapter since its organization. A gift was voted to the mountain school of Carcassonne to assist in establishing a better lighting system, and a subscription was made to the Friendship Hill Association to go toward the purchase of the historic home of Albert Gallatin. The program of the afternoon was in charge of Mrs. Harry J. Horner, chairman of the committee on national defense, who gave a resume of the work of the Conference of Patriotic Societies, held in Washington in February, in which delegates from the 1812 Daughters participated. The next meeting of the chapter will be combined with the annual meeting of the state society in May, when the officers and delegates will be entertained in Pittsburgh.

Many Little Extras Banned by Feminine Shoe Style Arbiters

NOT so very many years ago, shoes were—just shoes! They were usually black, occasionally tan or white, but invariably they were plain and unadorned foot-coverings. But now a good shoe is a work of art, and, while it may vary from season to season in color, height of heel or matter of trimming, it is one of the bulwarks of style.

This season the shoemaker has discarded many of the little extra trimmings that have been gracing his wares for some time and is making line and color the fundamentals of his styles. Cut-outs, for instance, are quite definitely bad taste this spring, unless they partake of the general swing of the shoe. As ornaments—they are out! Bows, too, are almost non-existent, with the exception of the flat, tailored bow that fastens the Oxford. And buckles are very small, excepting the upright buckle seen on the evening slipper occasionally.

You will be interested to know that there has been a distinct modification in the height of the heel in the new shoe, and even more in the "spikiness" of the heel. The Spanish line, with its graceful curve and its firmer support for the heel, is much more popular. And, too, the Oxford has taken a new lease on life and is itself again, with no attempt to masquerade as a fancy shoe. For daytime wear, the one-strap shoe and the pump share honors and the sandal is reserved exclusively for formal wear in the afternoon or the evening.

As for color, beige reigns supreme in popularity this spring. Of course, until warm weather is here, black is quite necessary, but beige, ranging from the palest sand tone to the dark shade verging on brown, is indisputably the king of colors for shoes. The darker shades are particularly good in suede for early spring, and the sand tones will come into their own for resort wear.

The reptile leathers seem headed for popularity this year, and one combination of beige kid and reptile is especially handsome. The reptile leather may be just a touch at the toe of the shoe, or it may be used for the body of the shoe with a trimming of the beige kid.

WASHINGTON SOCIETY WOMEN TURN TO GARDENS

Mrs. David A. Reed Introduces Expert To Capital Friends

By GEORGINA WASHINGTON,
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, March 31.

THESE first gorgeous spring days the capital society woman, like her humbler sister, the plain American housewife, is turning her thoughts to things that grow in the ground.

With crocuses popping up everywhere, in parks and any kind of open space, she finds it hard to resist the pungent smell of the soil and the beauty of fragile blossoms.

Everywhere you go nowadays, women are discussing their gardens and their gardening, being as proud of the one as of the other. And even at social affairs, which are scarce enough during Lent, the same topic holds its place in the spotlight.

So it was very appropriate that the Congressional Club, that gathering for the wives of our Senators and Representatives, should call in Mrs. Nellie B. Allen to make a talk on gardening at this week's afternoon tea.

Mrs. Reed's Friend

Mrs. Allen is a recognized authority on the subject and Mrs. David A. Reed, wife of the Pennsylvania Senator, is responsible for her being here and introduced around.

Mrs. Allen has been commissioned to "do" gardens for a number of wealthy women, among them Mrs. Demarst Lloyd, who has a frowning old Tudor mansion in R street.

The gardens in old Georgetown, many of them behind high stone walls, have been famous in song and story for ages, but city gardens seem just now to be coming into their own in Washington.

The Italian Embassy has a courtyard garden that is beginning to blossom into loveliness and the Spanish Embassy has a patio which some day will undoubtedly be as famous as the one at the Pan-American Building. The house which the Vice President and Mrs. Dawes are occupying boasts a terraced garden looking off toward the city and shaded by forest trees.

Hoovers Have Forest

The Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Hoover have a bit of real forest at their back door with just enough landscaping to bring out its real beauties.

The park which surrounds Mrs. John B. Henderson's great house on Sixteenth street has stood for years. It has a number of pleasant garden spots and a charmingly placed swimming pool that is the delight of the younger members of the social and diplomatic sets.

Nor can one forget the famous gardens of Friendship, the country estate of Edward B. McLean, publisher and friend of President Harding. The McLean place also has a pool and marching rows of tulips at this time of year.

One spot that attracts all manner of visitors is Twin Oaks, the splendid home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Bell. None of its guests—who are indeed legion—ever leave without walking through the wonderful rose garden to the lily pond on the other side of the house.

Coolidge Party Uncertain

Speaking of gardens makes us wonder if Mrs. Coolidge is going to have her garden party for the war veterans who are in government hospitals about the city. This affair is usually a part of her spring social program, but this season she has been ill for a number of weeks and so has canceled most of her engagements.

In fact, Mrs. Coolidge's first appearance since her illness was at a Lenten musicale at the White House a short time ago, given for a small party of her friends. The wives of the Postmaster General and the Secretaries of Agriculture and of War poured tea.

Young John Coolidge was home from Amherst for the spring holidays, bringing with him two college friends, Edward Young and John Hills. The latter is the son of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. B. Hills, of Northampton, Mass., who have been White House guests themselves.

What John Coolidge seems to like best when he is at home is riding. You see him almost any old time galloping along the bridle paths, having the time of his young life.

Historical Society Elects Officers

THE Woman's Historical Society of Pennsylvania met Monday in the Congress of Clubs. After a short business session, Mrs. I. K. Teal, chairman for the day, took charge of the meeting. Mrs. Elsie Johns Wright, accompanied by Miss Margaret Jones, sang two groups of songs, and Mrs. Neva Morris entertained with song and story, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. William H. Patterson. Mrs. H. K. Johnston had a paper on "The Work of the Red Cross, in 1917-'18." The annual election of officers which followed resulted as follows: Mrs. Jay Turner, president; Mrs. H. A. Calderwood, first vice president; Mrs. John R. Lewis, second vice president; Mrs. I. K. Teal, recording secretary; Mrs. William B. McConnell, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. H. Huggans, treasurer; directors, Mrs. C. A. Burke, Mrs. Philip Kussart, Mrs. H. K. Johnston, Mrs. James McGaw, Mrs. W. G. Hughes, Mrs. J. Howard Flinn, Mrs. J. H. Greig, Mrs. Joseph Marclay and Mrs. Viola K. Ityan. The meeting of the society, April 9, will be a luncheon in the Congress of Clubs, at which Dr. Alfred P. James, professor of history, University of Pittsburgh, will speak on "The First Appalachian Frontier."

Parent-Teacher Society to Meet

ITS annual meeting will be held tomorrow afternoon by the Liberty School Parent-Teacher Association. Miss Elva Smith, head of the children's division of Carnegie Library, will speak on reading material for grade school girls and boys.

Women's Club Officers Feted

THE executive board of the West Liberty Women's Civic Club was entertained at luncheon last Wednesday by Mrs. David Smith, of West Liberty avenue. A short business session followed luncheon.

Popular Prints Seen As Leader in Spring Parade of Fashion

PRINTS and their amazing popularity this spring have made the way quite clear for the woman who is purchasing a new wardrobe just now. She sees everywhere these gorgeous color combinations in fabrics of all kinds and in costumes for all occasions. They are flattering to nearly everyone, they are not so easily soiled as are plain colors—and they do give rein to the love of color that is usually held in restraint in most of us.

Of these prints, perhaps the most popular of all are the polka dots. There was a time when these dots were seen only on afternoon clothes for hot summer days, but now they appear everywhere and from morning to night. They enliven sports skirts and jackets with plain sweaters; on blouses and jumpers with plain coats and skirts; on long sports coats, in the lining of plain coats; and as bindings and trimmings for daytime wear.

They even leap the chasm between the bathing suit and the evening dress, since the dots appear in lame and woven satin on marquisette for party gowns. The dots vary widely in size, too, as well as in color, with dots of mixed sizes seen in one design and in mixed colors in another.

Flowered material is especially good this season, too, appearing in such heavy material as lame as well as in the more familiar chiffon. But not all frocks, of course, are printed or flowered, and in the plain colors, black and beige hold away. Black and white combinations are proving particularly smart, especially in the sports clothes, and probably will be used much at the resorts. An interesting novelty appears, too, in the use of dark colors, such as navy blue, brown, dull gray and black in spring and summer morning ensembles.

The various off-white shades are in for their share of popularity this spring, and the different tones of blue, too, are being used much in the newer frocks. And, rather surprisingly, we see quite a lot of the autumn shades of red, yellow and green, as well as the English red and the flattering gray.

You will like, too, the diagonal bands on sweaters and dresses, which are being used repeatedly. They make striking-looking costumes with their contrasts in color.

having for its chief feature readings from English plays by Mrs. E. Martin Browne, wife of one of the instructors in the Carnegie Tech drama school. As you may recall, Mrs. Browne was known as Henzie Raeburn on the London stage and came here with her husband about a year ago.

The musical part of the program included several numbers for two pianos, played by Mrs. Nelson, Mrs. Allderdice, Miss Christine Griggs and Miss Marcella Pallos, and also two groups for two pianos by four hands, the first played by Mrs. John E. Freeman and Mrs. George Willock, and the second by Miss Pallos and Miss Anita Freund.

Miss Mary Redmond gave several violin solos, and David Bodycombe, boy soprano of the Church of the Ascension choir, sang, with Mrs. W. Bailey McCreery as accompanist.

To Wed In Gotham

Mrs. Ambrose Nevin Diehl is to be matron of honor at the wedding, and the best man will be Gilbert Dudley Fish, of Pelham, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Casselman are planning to live in Roslyn place, and will be at home after June 1.

Home for Vacation

AMONG the girls home from Vassar College for the spring vacation is Anna Jane Phillips, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Phillips, of "Impton," Brownsville road, Carrick, who arrived last Saturday and expects to return to school again tonight. She had as her guests over the week-end two of her fellow members of the senior class, Margot McLane, of Honolulu, and Ruth Kimbal, of Minneapolis.

Yesterday, the girls were in Greensburg, where they were guests at a bridge luncheon given to announce the engagement of another of their classmates, Catherine Gerwig Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Jones, of that place, formerly of Parkersburg, W. Va., to Stanley Pingrey Miner, of New York. Mrs. Jones gave the luncheon in her home. Mr. Miner was graduated from Dartmouth in 1922.

Anna Jane Phillips gave a dinner dance recently at Vassar to announce the engagement to the girls at college.

Miss Provost Engaged

ONE of yesterday's announcements was that of the engagement of Laura Gardner Provost, daughter of the G. W. Provosts, of Beacon street, to Oliver B. Merrill, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver B. Merrill, of Summit, N. J.

AN engagement announced during the last week was that of Harriette Wilson, daughter of Judge Harry R. Wilson, of Clarion, to Harold Shields Hays, of Pittsburgh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick D. Hays, of Clarion. The wedding will take place in the early fall. Miss Wilson is a sister-in-law of Mrs. Lawrence E. Wilson, the former Dorothy Marshall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Lose Fat in an easier way

Don't over-exert—correct the cause

Some can reduce by starvation or abnormal exercise, but the way is long and hard. Not one in ten of the over-fat has the patience to continue. And even then the best efforts may fail unless the inner cause is corrected.

Over twenty years ago scientific men discovered a great cause of excess fat. They found a substance which Nature employs to turn food into fuel and energy rather than into fat. They proved that an extra supply of that substance could check the formation of fat.

That substance was embodied in Marmola prescription tablets. People have used them for two decades—millions of boxes of them. Now you can see in almost every circle how much they have done for beauty, health, and vitality. Doubtless some of your friends can tell you. Slenderness prevails today, fat is the exception.

The use of Marmola requires no abnormal exercise or diet, though moderation helps. Users simply take four tablets daily until the weight comes down to normal. They combat the cause.

Try the help which has done so much for so many. You owe that to yourself. You cannot afford to stay over-fat when reduction is so easy and so pleasant. Watch the results, then tell your friends as people have for 20 years been doing. All your friends you will be glad that you know Marmola. Go order now.

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 per box. If your druggist is out, he will get them at once from his jobber.

'BILLION-A-YEAR OIL TRIBUTE FROM U. S.' GOAL SET BY WORLD-WIDE BRITISH TRUST

ENGLAND WAITING AS WE DRAIN THRICE AS MUCH AS ALL OTHER NATIONS

In Last Year America Got Rid of One-Fifth Of Its Total Oil Supply, While Rest of World With Six Times the Resources Used Only ONE ONE-HUNDRED AND FORTIETH of Its Supply.

By ERNEST J. HOPKINS,
Special Correspondent Hearst Newspapers.

WHEN a country with only about one-fourteenth of the world's petroleum stores left in its ground keeps right on, day after day, producing seven-tenths of the world's petroleum output from its ground, it obviously constitutes a challenge.

That is our country's situation, and it is directly to the interest of the British "oil trust."

The British, for years, have looked at the off-balance oil production of the United States with satisfaction. That is shown by the quotations from British leaders, printed later in this article.

The Views of the British

The British view may be expressed about as follows:

If the American companies, by overproduction, glut their own market, selling oil and gasoline at low prices that engender wasteful use, so much the earlier will the British day arrive and so much the more deeply-rooted will be America's need for petroleum from the vast British-owned reserves.

If the American companies send surplus oil abroad now and sell it for whatever it will bring in Europe and Asia, the British "trust" will recoup itself later, when its time comes to send Persian, South American or East Indian oil into the United States. Americans then will pay for British oil as Americans have paid for monopolized British rubber.

Federal reports contain some disquieting facts. It was brought out before the Federal Conservation Board that our oil industry already has spent more money in wildcatting, leasing, drilling, building pipe lines and refineries and service stations than it has yet received back from the consumer.

It is commonly stated that the oil business of the United States is "an $11,000,000,000 industry"—meaning, doubtless, that $11,000,000,000 is the amount of money put into oil development. But try to find, remaining in the United States, 11,000,000,000 barrels of oil to justify that figure!

It is customary, even in government circles, to hold that our oil production would become "balanced" if the American consumer used up all the American oil, month by month, eliminating exports and keeping storage at a level. In 1927, our oil fields were drained for 903,800,000 barrels of oil—a huge amount, exceeding the world production of 1922.

The United States, relatively speaking, has a three-quarter pint bottle of petroleum remaining in its ground today.

The rest of the world has a gallon jug.

The three-quarter-pint or twelve-ounce bottle is the main reliance of some 5,000 American oil companies, small and large.

British Interests in U. S.

Of the foreign oil in the gallon jug, about a quart is held by Soviet Russia, which confiscated the Russian oil fields in 1917. That leaves more than six pints; and 90 per cent of those six pints are held today by the British "trust"—which also claims a large share in the Russian quart.

A few American companies have a share in that gallon jug abroad. Their holdings are mainly in Latin America.

Of the oil in the United States' twelve-ounce bottle, the American branches of the British "trust" own or control at least one ounce.

Such, in rough approximation, is the ownership of the world's petroleum reserves. What about the production?

Out of the little twelve-ounce bottle, year by year, there are taken seven spoonfuls to every three taken from the foreign jug.

There is the essential fact that is out of balance.

Last year, for example, while the United States' oil fields poured out 903,800,000 barrels of "crude," all the rest of the world produced only 351,500,000 barrels.

The year before that, the United States' oil fields poured out 766,800,000 barrels, and the rest of the world only 330,104,000.

It has been that way for years: Over a ten-year period the American production has been 70 per cent of the whole.

Early in 1926, the Federal Oil Conservation Board, consisting of the secretaries of interior, commerce, navy and war, called a meeting of leading oil men at Washington.

In preparation for that meeting, the American Petroleum Institute—official organization of the oil industry—sent out a questionnaire to each and every oil company in the United States, asking: "How much oil do you estimate you have left in the ground?"

Remaining Oil in U. S.

The geologists got to work. The institute added up the replies, and the Federal Conservation Board was dully informed:

That the remaining oil in United States ground on January 1, 1926, was 5,321,427,000 barrels.

This referred only to oil produceable by "natural flow" or by pumping—the present methods. A huge amount—nearly 30,000,000,000 barrels—of "dead" oil were estimated to remain after that. This could doubtless be recovered by some costly form of "oil mining," yet to be devised—and yet to be financed. While natural-flow oil can come in from abroad this "dead" oil is economically worthless.

Now, the production for 1926 alone was 766,504,000 barrels, for 1927 903,800,000 barrels, which leaves, by simple subtraction, only 3,651,123,000 barrels of natural-flow oil remaining on January 1, 1928!

The two years' output had taken away 1,670,304,000 barrels, or 30 per cent of what had been taken when the Conservation Board received the report. The discussions of oil conservation still continue—but their subject matter is disappearing!

Our Need for Petroleum

Just now our United States supply is continuing to disappear at the rate of about 2,360,000 barrels each day, Sundays included. The drain on all the rest of the world put together is under 1,000,000 barrels a day.

In 1919, Dr. David White, chief geologist of the United States Geological Survey, ventured to make an estimate of oil in the ground, covering the entire world.

For our own country, Dr. White's figures have proved to be 2,500,000,000 barrels conservative. No doubt they were conservative for other parts of the world as well; for Venezuela, for example.

Taking Dr. White's 1919 estimates merely as something to figure by, I may state that he gave the whole planet 65,000,000,000 barrels of oil—of which 53,000,000,000 were outside the United States.

Subtracting, just as we did above, the entire foreign production since 1919, we would get a remainder of 49,250,000,000 barrels of oil today remaining in the ground abroad, according to the White estimate.

Quite a Contrast Shown

That gives us, at least, something to contrast to the 3,651,123,000 barrels which the American Petroleum Institute says are left in American ground!

Here is another way to put it: In 1919 our country apparently had 12,000,000,000 barrels of petroleum out of the whole world's 65,000,000,000. Call it, roundly, one-sixth.

But today, after subtracting the past eight years' known production, our country has 3,651,123,000 barrels out of the whole world's 52,901,123,000—which would be less than one-fourteenth!

I prefer to allow for plenty of error. Instead of estimating that we have only one part in fourteen let us say we have one part in eleven. That is where I get the metaphor of the 12-ounce bottle and the gallon jug, for a gallon is 128 fluid ounces.

Put it another way still: On January 1, 1927, we have 4,549,923,000 barrels of oil left in our ground, by the American Petroleum Institute estimate.

During 1927, we took out 903,800,000 barrels of it or nearly one-fifth.

The Balance of Supply

But the rest of the world had 51,000,000,000 barrels, when 1927 began, figured on Dr. White's estimate. And in 1927 only 351,500,000 barrels of it was taken out—only one-

Any way you take it, the middle of the coming decade will be the critical period for American motordom and American oil-burning machinery.

If, by that time, Americans have found oil reserves sufficient to "break" the British "corner," well and good. If not—we shall remember the words of the British speaker who lately prophesied that England would pay her war debt from the profits of oil sold to the American consumer.

Why Farm Relief Is a Major National Issue

A FOOL AND HIS OIL ARE SOON PARTED

UNCLE SAM is foolishly pouring his limited supply of oil out to England and the whole world. John Bull, whose petroleum trust dominates the globe, is helping exhaust America's resources while saving his own. The English trust, the second biggest operating concern in the U. S., buys American oil here to sell to our citizens, as well as exporting it to other countries.

JOHN BULL, whose far-flung monopoly dominates the oil fields of the world, is conserving his resources while helping Uncle Sam to drain his. Out of an estimated 4,000,000,000 barrels supply left in the United States, 903,800,000 barrels were poured out in the last year. At the same time, out of the 50,000,000,000 of foreign oil, only 351,500,000 barrels were used.

At this rate of wastefulness, how long will it be before Uncle Sam's tanks run dry? John Bull is waiting for that day when he can untap his wells and sell his oil to the U. S.

Let us see from their own words how they view the oil situation.

In British financial circles it is well understood that their Royal Dutch-Shell combine, Anglo-Persian Oil Company and the rest are not so much striving for mastery today as permitting it to come to them, through America's wastefulness.

As lately as October 14, 1927, the British Oil Industries Club, corresponding to our American Petroleum Institute, held its annual dinner in London. From the London "Petroleum News" I quote the indirect report of the speech made by President W. L. Mackenzie:

"The fact remained that the present position (of the oil industry) was rather critical and overproduction was overwhelming. The United States were the chief culprits and he could not see why they could not control themselves. (Laughter.)

Tells of "Great Secret"

"In that connection he would tell them a great secret, since there was no possibility of his words getting beyond that room.

"There was at least one British company that could double or treble its production of crude oil in a very short time if they so disposed.

"But they were doing the same thing, and keeping the oil in nature's reservoir.

"When the market was good, then they would bring it forward and sell it at a proper price." (Applesauce.)

The most adroit and courteous British "oil statesman" is Sir John Cadman, K. C. M. F., chairman of the government-owned Anglo-Persian Company. In his report to his board of directors, November 2, 1927, I find the following:

"The United States is the largest producer as well as the largest consumer. . . . For years past America has met her requirements from her own sources. Her consumption exceeds that of all other nations; her need for petroleum supplies on a great scale will not disappear; and her wealth is immeasurably great. . .

No Waste Shown Here

"I would like to point out that, in some respects, the Persian oil industry enjoys a position which the Federal Oil Conservation Board would like to give the American oil industry as a whole. Fortunately, we are not compelled to overproduce, which is so often the case elsewhere—owing to the feverish rivalry of offsetting competitors. In general, Persian oil is ideally situated to secure the maximum technical and economic advantage."

Cadman's concern has all the oil in Persia—the huge D'Arcy concession covering 500,000 square miles.

Sir Henri W. A. Deterding, of the Royal Dutch-Shell—the "modern Rockefeller," as he has been called—has been careful about his statements since 1923, when our Federal Trade Commission brought out its report on "Foreign Ownership in the Petroleum Industry"—a document you should read.

But in his report covering the year 1923 he told his directors:

"Many holders of comparatively small fields are naturally striving in feverish haste to obtain possession of the precious product before it is snatched away by the neighbor,

'LEGISLATION MUST CURE PRESENT DEFICIENCIES OF SUPPLY AND DISTRIBUTION'

"Demand for Right-About-Face of Federal Government Toward Agriculture to Offset Lack of Natural Agencies of Farm Production Is Spread; Sharpest Conflict Centers Around McNary-Haugen Bill."

By CHESTER C. DAVIS

Former Commissioner of Agriculture of Montana and Now Associated With a Number of Co-operative Associations and Farm Organizations

OUT of the West, along the trail blazed by predecessors which in their day shocked defenders of the status quo but nevertheless made history, an idea has been spreading until over a large part of the United States it appears as a major issue.

It is a demand for a right-about-face in the policy of the United States toward agriculture. In particular it is a demand for national legislation aimed to make up for lack of control of natural agencies of farm production by affording farmers an opportunity to regulate the supply and distribution of their products in the market places.

The sharpest conflict of this movement centers around the McNary-Haugen bill. Organized farm groups are seeking through that measure to secure the beginning of a national program for handling agricultural surpluses by and on behalf of those who produce them. It passed the Sixty-ninth Congress to encounter President Coolidge's veto on February 25, 1927. Its successor, revised to meet many of the objections raised by the President, is now before the new Congress, with a vote pending in each house.

Troublesome Political Side

Like most economic questions upon which opinions differ sharply, the farm question has its political side, sufficiently troublesome to bring white hairs to some political heads. The farm slogan, "Equality for Agriculture," found its way into three national party platforms in 1924. Farmers think they know what is happening to them, and those who are articulate through their organizations are emphatic in publishing their views.

Leaders of opinion in non-agricultural groups at first condemned the demands of the farmers without attempting to understand them. A change has taken place; neither the state of the farmer's mind nor that of his pocketbook has shown the improvement that was predicted a few years ago.

The National Industrial Conference Board, the Business Men's Joint Commission representing the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Industrial Conference Board, and the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities of the United States, have studied the farm question. Their reports reach a common conclusion that there is an agricultural problem in this country of sufficient importance to justify national concern and national action.

Farm Group Has Program

The non-agricultural authorities have been more definite in their diagnoses of conditions than in their prescription of remedies. The farm groups on the other hand have brought forth a program and are insisting that it be adopted unless its opponents offer an equally effective and desirable plan. Farmers insist that up to date no adequate substitute program has been offered.

The present is the fifth session of Congress since the McNary-Haugen bill appeared. It was first introduced late in 1923 with the approval of the late secretary of agriculture, Henry C. Wallace; was reported favorably to both Houses in late winter, and was defeated in the lower body on June 3, 1924. The vote was 223 to 155.

Since then the measure has changed in its form and provisions, but always it has dealt with the problem of controlling the agricultural surplus. It has been brought to a vote in one or both Houses during each session of Congress that has intervened with increasing support until its passage by both Houses last year.

Conflict of Centers

In the first vote in 1924, the western strength alone was not sufficient to pass the bill, although the districts supporting it comprised about two-thirds of the area of the United States. But soon after the two great agricultural surplus producting regions, the West and the South, joined hands, the measure was passed.

The vote division has not been on party lines, but between the wide open spaces and the industrial centers. Approximately 52 per cent of the voting Republicans and 57 per cent of the voting Democrats in the House of Representatives voted to pass the measure last year. The party percentages in the Senate were precisely the same.

The bill which passed was a very different measure from the one first introduced in the late months of 1923, while the measure now before Congress differs in many particulars from its immediate predecessor. It is enough for present purposes to say that each McNary-Haugen bill has provided for the collection of a unit charge or "equalization fee" upon each commodity dealt with, as it moves in commerce, in order to provide funds for the expense of such surplus control operations as are undertaken to stabilize and protect the market for the commodity.

During the war the productive plant of the farmers of the United States expanded. Crop and livestock prices kept pace with or outran other prices. Deflation followed the war and post-war inflation. Farm prices at once fell out of line with costs of production. Farmers are necessarily slow to readjust their business. They know but one way to meet high

'SOUTH TYROL PROVING NEW ALSACE-LORRAINE'

Wiegand Finds Post-War Treaty Has Bred Another Storm Spot in Europe

'FORMER AUSTRIANS WRITHE UNDER RULE OF ITALIANS'

Cry Against Denationalization From German-Speaking Minority Annexed to Italy By Peace Treaty Echoes Vainly in League Of Nations Ears."

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND.

INNSBRUCK, Tyrol, March, 1928.

WITH a suddenness and unexpectedness that startled the chancelleries of Europe, the apparently agonized cry of alleged oppression and tyranny of about 250,000 Austro-Germans in South Tyrol against the Italy of Mussolini broke out upon the world public ear through the Austrian Parliament the other day. It was the wail of a quarter of a million of the vanquished of the late war. Their little world among the beautiful Tyrolean Alps and valleys south of the Brenner Pass. Fate, in guise of Woodrow Wilson, Lloyd George and Clemenceau, the "Tiger," amputated from Austria and gave to one of the victors—Italy— for "military strategic reasons."

The cry that sounded through the Austrian Parliament was designed as an appeal to the "international morale" of a world public opinion that has grown rather deaf to such cries from oppressed minority nationalities in Europe. It has, however, once more called attention to the following:

The tragedy of the South Tyroleans, torn from their mother country and race by arbitrary dictatorial peace treaties made for "the benefits of humanity and to end all wars;" that these people are now subject to unwanted but unescapable processes of compulsory denationalization.

"Processes of Denationalization"

The creation of some six or seven war-breeding "Alsace-Lorraines" by the Wilson-Clemenceau-Lloyd George peace treaties, as against one before the war,

The insecurity of the artificially drawn frontiers of the Europe of today.

The impotency or indifference, or both, of the League of Nations toward suffering minority nationalities of whom the League is supposed to be the special angel as the "Guardian of the Weak."

As a foster-mother for the millions of national waifs made by the statesmen who created the League of Nations, the latter is an utter failure and as an individual would be charged with cruel neglect and indifference.

In a speech devoid of pathos or passion, Deputy Kolb, Catholic priest and for two years professor of history at Brixen under the Italian regime before he moved to North Tyrol, charged Mussolini's government with having made a "scrap of paper" of the covering note attached to the peace treaty of St. Germain and the violation of every promise made by Italy therein.

These promises were: Signor Nitti, then premier, declared in the Italian Parliament:

"The assurances which I have given guarantees that these persons of alien race will be treated in accordance with liberty, equality and true sympathy. They must feel that Italy does not desire denationalization."

An Invisible Terror

The Allies in a covering note to the peace treaty with Austria said:

"From the very clear declarations made by the Italian Premier in the Rome Parliament, it is evident that the Italian government intends to pursue towards its new subjects of German nationality a broad liberal policy in the matter of language, culture and economic interests."

A few days later, Signor Tittoni, then Italian foreign minister, declared in Parliament:

"The peoples of foreign race who are joined to us, must know that the thought of oppression or denationalization is far from our minds, that their language and cultural institutions, will be respected and their administrative employes will enjoy all the rights of our state. We can give the population of South Tyrol the assurance that they shall never be subjectd to a police regime or be exposed to persecution and caprice as were Austria's subjects in Istria and in the Trentino for so many years."

Such were the promises. And, what has happened? Deputy Kolb, supported by Dr. Seipel, the Catholic Monk Chancellor of Austria, and other Deputies in Parliament, charge that a reign of police terror and tyranny prevails in South Tyrol; that the use of the German language is being suppressed; that the teaching of German, the language of the natives, is being forbidden in schools, and that even the teaching of religion in German is prohibited, the German language newspapers excepting two or three monthly periodicals, suppressed.

In fact, that high pressure efforts are at work to exterminate the lingualstic and cultural individuality of the Tyrolean subject, going so far as even Latinizing German family names, thus cutting them off completely from their past. Other speakers in the Austrian Parliament added to this charges of rape of German women by Italian police, arrests without cause, etc.

What are the facts? They are not easy to obtain to one's own satisfaction in all details in only a few days' investigation. Many of the Germanic element are afraid to talk. They are suspicious of strangers when it comes to answering questions and fear denunciation.

Something like an invisible terror and fear haunts the sunny valleys and mountain sides of South Tyrol. Excepting that on every sign, every guide post and even every picture postcard German has disappeared and been replaced by Italian and that you see many Italian military and police, there are no obvious signs of oppression and tyranny that the foreigner would immediately see.

The Italian officials do not attempt to deny that they are trying to cram a foreign language down Austro-German throats and make good Fascists of simple alien peasant mountaineers who really do not know what it is all about.

German is still taught in several of the higher schools in South Tyrol. That ends within two years, after which the public use of German is forbidden. The population, old and young, is given just two years more to become Italians in language, if not in blood.

The simple peasant folk shake their heads. They cannot understand why they may not continue to use their rich South German with its quaint Tyrolean flavor. Surely the League of Nations will not permit such an outrage! Or, "America will help us!" Then you may hear a deep growl from an old mountaineer with long pipe and feather in his green hat: "Der Verdammte Wilson, der hat uns dieses gebracht." (Damned Wilson, he brought us this).

Singularly enough the Tyroleans do not call the Italians "Itallener" but "die Welsche," that is "Welshmen." The Italians resent that term as much as they do our "Dago," and woe betide the Tyrolean if he uses it in the hearing of a Facist.

That the teaching of German by private teachers is forbidden, I found not to be quite true. But, it is discouraged very much from official sources. The teacher must have the approval of the Italian authorities, not always easy to get.

"Italianizing the Dead"

One of the requirements is that the teacher must know Italian equally as well as German, and he is put through a rigid examination. The number of such teachers appears to be quite inadequate to the demand. Moreover, the very fact that they have been authorized by the Italian authorities makes them suspicious to the Germans, who fear spying and denunciation.

It would almost seem that Mussolini fears or imagines that the little quarter of a million "silver" of Germans under the skin of 42,000,000 Italians might transform over night into a Teutonic spearhead. The length to which the Duce is going to Italianize South Tyrol in the shortest time possible extends even to the dead. Inscriptions on tombstones, the Germans tell me, must be in Italian.

Investigation shows that it is partly true and partly not. The Italian authorities deny that inscriptions on existing tombstones are being changed into Italian. It is true, however, that since six months, inscriptions on new tombstones must be in Italian with the exception of six towns where Germans may still use the German language over their dead. It is believed that even that will no longer be permitted after two years. This "Italianizing of the dead," as the Germans characterize it, has perhaps aroused the Tyroleans more than any one other order issued by the Italian authorities in Mussolini's policy of absorbing the Austro-Germans under forced draught.

The "Italianizing" or "Romanizing" of the names of Germans, thereby, so to speak, cutting them off absolutely from their past family history and tradition, in many instances some centuries old, is going on under "pressure" as differentiated from "compulsion." Those families who at any time in their history have had a member of Latin stock in such family are "called upon" to change their names into Italian to show thereby that they are true and faithful citizens of Italy.

This "call" is in most instances interpreted as a "command" which for material reasons of property or business has been complied with by not a few. In the circumstances it would be stretching the meaning of truth to say that it was always done "voluntarily," as claimed by Italian officials. It is a part of the policy to uproot everything German.

The Tyroleans complain much of what they call "Wirtschaftliche Verfolgung," that is, economic persecution in the form of discrimination. They asserted that they have to pay double the taxes paid by Italians in the same business and in addition are handicaped and forced to the wall by subsidized Italian concerns who are favored by the authorities in every way.

As the Germans are afraid to give details or specific cases, lest the information be traced to them, and the Italians indignantly and vehemently deny such allegations, it is difficult for a casual visitor to ascertain the truth. These allegations are most numerous in Bozen and Meran, the picturesque and quaint old towns, the goal of so many summer and winter vacationers.

The clergy, I was told, is the remaining bulwark, and the strongest one, against the rapid Italianization of a German people. The Tyrol, both north and south, is preponderantly Catholic, devoutly so. The Crucified Christ and Holy Virgin shrines are scattered the length and breadth of the Tyrolean land, and are on every road and mountain path, an inspiration and object of worship of peasant and traveler.

The ranks of the Catholic priesthood is still almost solidly German. It is the one great consolation of the Tyroleans. In the Vatican the strong Italian pressure for Italian priests for South Tyrol is met by the no less strong counter-current of the powerful Catholic Centrist Party of Germany and the Catholic Christian Social Party of Austria. The Austrian chancellor, Dr. Siepel, is himself monk and Catholic priest.

Mussolini justifies his policy on the necessity of "Italian security" in that strategically very important South Tyrol corner given Italy by Wilson, Clemenceau and Lloyd George. It is a question whether by such methods, incubating intense hatred in a tenacious mountain people, he will best attain that end.

Strong as feeling is in parts of South Tyrol, talk is moderate and circumspect, though hundreds are reported to be in jails for saying and doing things that were impolitic in the circumstances, to say the least. On the north side of the Brenner Pass, here in North Tyrol, which is still Austrian, there is much immoderate talk against Mussolini's Italy. Thousands have relatives in South Tyrol and the reports of oppression and tyranny that float across the pass, have greatly inflamed public sentiment in Innsbruck and all North Tyrol. Dramatically hardy mountaineers raise their gnarled fists toward the distant Brenner and utter a "Heilige Schwur," that is make a holy vow, to rescue their kin some day.

Why doesn't the League of Nations do something? I was asked again and again. There still is an astonishing naive faith in that impotent body in these parts, and no less than America could, if she would, ameliorate the conditions of the South Tyroleans.

Britain has minorities, and it has Egypt. Britain holds they are her "internal affairs." France has minorities and only recently Poincare declared France would see that the question of the minorities did not come up at Geneva. Mussolini warns everybody off South Tyrol in "Italy's internal affairs." Besides, there is no South Tyrol question, he asserts. Germany, disarmed, has no military power to give value to any representations. The "moral power" of world public opinion, is rarely a force. Besides it is getting deaf from all the appeals from China, India, Egypt, Syria, Morocco and the 35,000,000 minority nationals in Europe. South Tyrol promises to remain an "Alsace-Lorraine" for some time to come that on occasion will give nightmares to the European chancelleries.

BRITISH WAITING FOR U. S. TO DRAIN OIL FIELDS AND GAIN WORLD MONOPOLY

which inevitably results in an irrational method of production and in some instances even leads to premature exhaustion. This is undoubtedly the case in the United States . . . a country which can certainly not be accused of wasting its oil resources in the Dutch East Indies."

By obtaining three-eighths of the Royal Dutch-Shell's oil needs from the fields of the United States, Deterding's great combine is enabled to conserve its East Indian holdings. For instance, up to 1923 the Royal Dutch-Shell supplied Japan from the East Indies—since 1923, from California.

Consistency of Utterances

Note the remarkable consistency of these British utterances all through the period of years. Note, also, the words, "although too late," standing out like a lighthouse in Deterding's statement for 1920:

"As regards competition, the fight for new production deserves our special attention. This struggle became especially keen when the significance of fuel oil became generally manifest. . . .

"The advantage of having production not concentrated in only one country, but scattered over the whole world, has been clearly proven." It needs hardly to be mentioned that the American petroleum companies also realized, although too late, that it was not sufficient to have a big production in their own country. . . .

"It goes without saying that we are now reaping the benefit resulting from this advantageous position."

The policy of the British oil combine was first brought to American attention by the forthright statement made as long ago as 1919 by Sir Edward Mackay Edgar, head of the London banking house of Sperling and Company.

The British Policy

The policy of Sir Mackay outlined has been the British policy ever since. Discovery of more oil fields in California and in Texas postponed his date of triumph for a few years beyond 1929; but his forecast of a $1,000,000,000 yearly tribute to be paid in time by the American consumer to the British "trust" is conservative.

Americans now use 800,000,000 barrels of oil a year instead of the 500,000,000 of Sir Mackay's estimate. And if the British "trust" only charged us $2 a barrel for imported oil, it would be the most merciful "trust" in history—far more merciful than the British rubber combine!

Sir Edward minced no words:

"While America is exhausting her supplies at a prodigal speed, we are getting a firmer grip upon the world's oil reserves. . .

"I should say that two-thirds of the improved oil fields of Central and South America are in British hands.

"Or take again that greatest of all oil organizations, the Shell group. It owns exclusively or controls interests in every important oil field in the world, including the United States, Russia, Mexico, the Dutch East Indies, Rumania, Egypt, Venezuela, Trinidad, India, Ceylon, the Malay States, North and South China, Siam, the Straits Settlements and the Philippines."

Will Have to Buy

Sir Edward did not even mention the Anglo-Persian, owned by the British government, with Iraq and Persia at its disposal.

"We shall have to wait a few years before the full advantages of this situation shall begin to be reaped; but that that harvest eventually will be a great one there can be no manner of doubt.

"To the sum of many millions of pounds a year, America before long will have to purchase from British companies, and to pay for in dollar currency in progressively increasing proportion, the oil she cannot do without, and is no longer able to furnish from her own store.

"I estimate that, if their present curve of consumption, especially of high grade productions, is maintained, Americans in ten years will be under the necessity of importing 500,000,000 barrels of oil yearly at $2 a barrel—a very low figure—and that means an annual payment of $1,000,000,000, most, if not all, of which will find its way into British pockets.

Experts Aware of Plight

"With the exception of Mexico, and to a lesser extent of Central America, the outer world is securely barricaded against an American invasion in force. There may be small, isolated sallies, but there can never be a mass attack. The British position is impregnable.

"This is no revelation. The United States experts have been well aware of this situation for more than a year. But Congress and public opinion were not on their guard.

"The public at large, convinced that America is an immense reservoir of petroleum, and never having seen its engines stop for want of oil, take it for granted that petroleum is a product which grows naturally, like apples on an apple tree.

"Unfortunately for them—and fortunately for us—their eyes have been opened too late."

These articles I am writing are based on the belief that it is not "too late."

But conservation of America's remaining oil must be energetic.

And in finding American oil reserves abroad, we must follow the British example and conserve them.

WHICH WILL EMPTY FIRST?

THIS drawing helps to visualize the oil situation of the world. Behold the resources of the United States contained in a pint bottle, of which the English oil trust owns one-twelfth. The rest of the world's resources fill a gallon receptacle, of which the British Government directed monopoly holds nearly three-fourths.

To realize the wastefulness of the United States, imagine that EVERY YEAR WE ARE TAKING SEVEN SPOONFULS OUT OF OUR LITTLE BOTTLE, WHILE FOREIGN COUNTRIES ARE TAKING ONLY THREE SPOONFULS OUT OF THEIR GALLON. How soon will it be before our bottle is empty and we will have to buy our oil from the gallon can at whatever price the owners wish to charge us?

Jumps From Bed, Gas Presses Heart

"I had stomach gas so bad I had to get up nights because of the pressure on my heart. I used Adlerika and have been entirely relieved."—R. F. Krueger

The simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, saline, etc., (known as Adlerika), has a most surprising DOUBLE action. First, it acts on BOTH upper and lower bowel (most medicines act on lower bowel only) and removes foul matter that often poisoned the system for months. Second, Adlerika clears all GAS and sourness from stomach and bowels, bringing INSTANT relief from stomach trouble. And in addition, Adlerika removes netabolic poisons which cause neuritis, rheumatism, etc.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, writes: 'Adlerika, in addition to its intestinal cleansing, checks the growth of intestinal bacteria and bacilli.'"

Dr. J. Weaver "In my 50 years' practice, I have found nothing to excel Adlerika."

J. E. Puckett: "After using Adlerika, I feel better than for 20 years. Awful impurities were eliminated."

It will astonish you the great amounts of poisonous matter Adlerika brings out—matter you would never believe was in your system. In chronic constipation, gas, bloating, sour stomach and sick headache, just ONE spoonful Adlerika brings wonderful relief. At leading druggists. For 16 Years I Have Recommended Arbolone to Reduce

By Dr. Theodore Beck

WITH fashion demanding the slim silhouette for both men and women, there have been countless pleas for guidance and help from those who are many pounds overweight, yet who do not want to weaken themselves by too strict diets, or go to the bother of systematic exercises, both of which methods have oftentimes proven of little or no help, and in some cases have actually done more harm than good.

To them I have explained the teachings of science, that obesity or excess fat, is quite often the result of a partial failure of a certain gland to secrete and disperse through the blood an iodine gland substance which nature provided as a regulator of fat absorption from the food we consume. In these cases, and they are by far in the majority, the problem is to simply administer small, harmless amounts of this gland substance, thus lending the necessary aid our bodies need in the control of fat accumulation.

Many years ago, by experiments and analysis, I found that Arbolone tablets have the correct incredients which go to control the condition I have outlined above, and as a consequence, I have unhesitatingly recommended them to thousands of my readers residing in all parts of our beautiful United States. Taken as per directions which are contained in each package, I have never known them to be harmful. On the contrary, many, many written grateful letters, telling of reductions of from 10 to 75 pounds, and of enjoying better health and greater happiness with their new, slender, graceful figures. Leading drug stores dispense Arbolone tablets.

"Have taken one box of ARBOLONE and have lost 11 pounds. Before beginning it, I could not walk upstairs without being exhausted and out of breath, but now it does not wind me in the least. I feel so much better, I intend to continue taking ARBOLONE until my weight is back to normal." Mrs. Joseph A. P——, —— Reba Place, Evanston, Ill.

"It is with great pleasure that I write you of the benefit derived from ARBOLONE. I am now reduced to the desired weight and in addition, I am enjoying better health." Mrs. H. P——, El Dorado, Ark.

"ARBOLONE has certainly done for me and another member of my family what nothing else could do, though we had tried for years." Miss N. M. St. C——, Reg. Nurse, New York City.

"Frank you for the good ARBOLONE has done for me. When I first began taking the tablets, I noticed that I no longer had that stuffy feeling, so I kept on, and so far I have reduced from 159 pounds to 151 pounds. I am telling my stout friends about ARBOLONE because I know it did not do the least harm. But it does reduce." Mrs. H. A. P——, —— Erie Ave., Renova, Pa.

"To Give Is an Art, But to Give to Everyone Who Asks Is An Injustice, Because Often One Thus Deprives a More Deserving One," Philanthropist Tells Author.

By EMIL LUDWIG,

World-Famous Biographer of the Great, Who Wrote the Life of Napoleon and Other Noted Works, and Who Has Just Completed a Visit to the United States.

ORMOND, Fla., March, 1928.

OVER the dense green steppe of the beach at Ormond there lay a golden light in the forenoon. The pale clothes of the golfers moved here and there like spots in the sun, while the faces and the legs of the black boys glistened like bronze figures. An unembarrassed group moved around playing in a happy mood, and even the darkies seemed less tired than glad over the good shots made with the clubs they had supplied.

We had missed the old gentleman and were told to seek him here. But there was none but old gentlemen here, and the groups were far away from one another. And although I knew his face from a photograph, it was not easy to distinguish individual heads in the blinding light.

Suddenly I saw how the others gathered in suspense around one player. How that player aimed at the distant hole, a gloved hand tightened around the golf club, then swung, and the next moment everybody was applauding.

The player gleefully swung both his arms high in air, holding his club in one of them. For the moment he seemed a dancer in his daring pose. But it was an old man, active and carefree, burned brown by the sun. It was a man whose shot had been a success, who wanted to embrace the world for gratitude. It was a happy man. It was John D. Rockefeller.

"Rockefeller's Harmony With the World"

This harmony with the world, this undisturbed satisfaction with a much blessed life, the joy of breathing, the delight in the sun, in the Lord, the outspoken optimism which has surmounted all obstacles, radiated from everything I observed about him one whole day.

Still this joy of life was guarded by constant circumspection so as not to harm its carrier by an overswing. Nor did the dancing movement of the golf player return after his lucky shot.

Caution in movement and in speech, exacting observance of established habits, weighing of judgments like in his game, slow aiming in golf and in life, represent the means with which Rockefeller achieved victory.

For he triumphed twice, once in his undertakings and once in his health. The richest man in the world would by no means impress me if he were not at the same time—and despite it—the healthiest old man that I ever saw. The art of never exciting himself has brought to him both successes, and even if he did miss a few of the high spots of a productive life with his adherence to this maxim, in the long run he still remains the victor.

"Always a Genius of Economy"

For the surprising thing about his life is that it unrolled itself in full personal calm through decades of battle, that by being economical with his strength and his feelings the man has developed the comfortable living of a saturated heir and not that of a self-made man. As a matter of fact, he was always a genius of economy.

At first I was astounded to find in his features a resemblance to Frederick the Great, of course only to the ancient Frederick of whom we have but few sketches and his death mask.

There is the same situation of the bony nose and the chin to two unbelievably small lips; only that the King had much deeper eyes, in whose critical glances his enmity of humanity expressed itself, while Rockefeller, from his hazy gray-blue ones, at least today, no longer seems to fix his gaze on men.

Meanwhile he was not the only surprise, for when I became acquainted with a robust old gentleman by his side I thought first that I had misunderstood the latter when he told me right after our introduction that he had fought in the Civil War.

Telling a Secret

"Forgive me, but you cannot be older than 70 at the most?"

"I am 93," replied a strong voice, "and Lincoln personally promoted me."

I fixed my hat again and glanced from the one to the other, and at the same time I thought: And now he will begin to speak about the last time he had tea with Julius Caesar!

A second victor. Is this land inexhaustible? It produces generals and trust magnates, of whom two together are one hundred and eighty years old, and among whom the older one has just made a shot over the knoll so that the ball stopped about 150 yards away.

Stomach and Conscience

General Ames, who pursued his ball as if it were a Virginia cavalryman, and we had only dreamed the last 65 years in a fairy tale, spoke with full knowledge of my books and observed that "Your Bismarck certainly was a real egoist. But must not every significant man be that?"

I looked from the one to the other:

"Since I find myself in the company of two men of this sort, I should like really to know your opinions!"

The General looked pleased and hid behind the excuse that he must play golf, although it was not at all his turn. Rockefeller drew nearer to me, cupped—as he also did at times later on—his hand by his lips when he spoke, as if he were telling a secret, and said with wisest smile:

"One should not trust too much, therefore all the more caution!"

"Did not you yourself need trust?" I retorted. He became characteristically evasive and said:

"The time and chances then were favorable. Then everything accumulated for us, one did not need to know much. I never thought that I would get this far."

"But there were many who, at the same favorable time, did not reach their goals?"

"Of course, there are always a few who hold the entire structure together. Anyhow, golf is the best exercise with which to rid oneself of one's balance of vanity."

Over the sun-sparkling hills, along the edge of the low palms and mangroves, the group moved forward, playing. The general told jokes incessantly reasoning that we were not at a funeral. His wife, who is nearly ninety, is so youthful that not long ago she donated a flying field to her country "because this nation must become the best flying people in the world."

Rockefeller's New Dimes

But when the general recounted that he had been a boy aboard a vessel with his father during the Crimean War I had to look deeper into his eyes in order to reassure myself that a living man and not a ghost was speaking to me of a golf course in Florida in the year 1828 as a witness of the Crimean War.

"Can you divulge your secret recipe to me?"

"Very simple; a good stomach and a good conscience."

"Which if the two, however, is more essential?"

He laughed, ran away with little steps and, as if he had made a good stroke he opened his hand and demanded his dime from Rockefeller. I got one, too, later, as the reward for my books and also a few more for my sons.

This dime, of which kind Rockefeller gets hundreds always blank and new from the mint, has a symbolic, one might even say demoniacal, meaning. Since it is practically worthless, every one can take it without embarrassment; but for the old man it is the smallest part of his immense power, and just like the kings used to lend an order on which there were reproduced quite small swords, as a participation in their power, even so did this sovereign invent this likeness, in order always to pass on a bit of his power.

Rockefeller's dime resembles the metric unit which the French Revolution computed from the smallest fraction of the equator so that even the poorest of peasants might have the feeling of owning a piece of the entire earth.

A STRIKING close-up of John D. Rockefeller, the ninety-year-old billionaire and philanthropist, whom Emil Ludwig calls "the healthiest old man I ever saw."

"Opportunity to Work"

The old gentleman loves this symbol. I saw him during the conversation hold a bunch of 20 or 30 of such dimes in his old hand against the light and I noticed how the shine of them made him happy.

At the same time he sat in one of the arbors which have been erected all over the course so that the golf players may rest between shots. This surcease from the game inclined him to expose to the stranger as much of his secrets as he deemed good for him.

"But now who will give you a dime?" I asked, since he played well.

"I am happy because of the approbation of my friends."

"Does it not get tiresome always to be only the giver?"

"I pray to God that He always give me enough sense to find the right people—those who really deserve it."

In the meantime the general declared that he would start a foundation with his dimes. One of the ladies had already a bracelet made out of hers. The old gentleman remained with his thoughts and said:

"I have made everything by peace. When I was young I needed only to put the right people in their places. Then I sought nothing else but the opportunity to work."

Post-Prandial Lotto

Suddenly he put on his sly smile, slapped me on the knee like a seaman, and said:

"If my friends over there hear this they will say that the old man is cheating."

In this moment I liked him very much because he uttered his axiom and found the way to self-mockery, which is the final sum in the long run.

Also, in the evening in his simple country house he was gay and continued his golf in another form after dinner: a new sedative of this nature which forces one to calm always and continually. He permits the small group gathered in his house every evening to play an innocent game of lotto, which he directs in order to prevent the distration of the several conversations. It is so inoffensive that, despite it, one can comfortably talk across the table.

Here, too, he has the same opportunity that he has in golf to discover the rules of the game when the subject does not please him. Since every player at the end of the game gets a nickel and the one who loses, a dime, I concentrated all of my efforts toward losing, in which objective I was blocked by the cleverness of another player. The entire thing gives a gay background, and this just what he wants to have.

Wealth and Happiness

Even this game is an allegory of his fruitful life. He sat there and distributed the small shining coins with the same patience and generosity as he distributes his millions for the well-being of mankind and to the benefit of science; and he told me that as an 18-year-old boy he gave such nickels to the church or the poor and that he entered them in his little notebook of expenditures. He still has this notebook.

As I saw him returning to his closest, earliest circle in this high old age, I thought of a famous American, of Stanley, who, after all his journeys and adventures, discoveries and battles, sat in his garden in London with his wife and entertained himself by naming a small stream Congo, and the small trees after the names of the stations of his first exploration trip.

The Capacity to Give

In between one hears him say wise things about money. That wealth does not mean happiness, he knows naturally, and that to give is more blessed than to take, he has more deeply experienced and understood than any other living human being.

"And still," he said, "I advise every man to save." Thus he spoke about all classes equally outspoken. He is not afraid of the colored race, and declares with political sagacity: "Now they are here."

Between anecdotes of the Irish and the Jews, which he tells inoffensively, between Indian songs that he recites from memory, between several—in this land usually considered optimistic—opinions, between the lotto and his little surprises, he always returns to the problem of giving and taking. It has completely occupied him for a lifetime. He has practiced it in greater measure than ever any human being before him.

"I knew a very rich man who did not have the capacity to give; he said it was physically impossible for him to open his hand. Therefore, he was a poor man. Children must learn to esteem money, they must learn to earn it themselves. This is what I am trying to teach my grandchildren. If they do not say thank you, they do not get another nickel, and then they learn it.

"But—to give is an art. To give to everybody who asks is an injustice because often in this fashion one takes it away from a more deserving one."

And suddenly there is lightning in the old eyes, he pounds on the table with his hand and says aloud:

"Yes, I am lucky that there are times when I can say NO!"

In this moment I recognized again the old warrior who, a generation ago, took up the fight with the powers of state and finally triumphed. I see the hand with which the extremely old, clear-headed and gentle man even today can pound on the table. Sixty years ago, silently and invisible to his opponents, this hand clenched itself into a balled fist when it had either to conquer or succumb.

Behind his chair I see the entire chain of adversaries rising like ghosts who have passed on before him, and whom he has outdone in success and vitality. I see the man who, with a nod from the center of his office, forced forth from the earth of half continents oil and made himself and America serviceable.

I marvel again at the chemistry of nature which in the same organism can a dozen times entirely use up the substance, entirely renew it and can still keep the receptacle fit for life.

At the same time I recognize how this man a hundred years ago would have become a great general, and how Napoleon today would have become a captain of industry, everything conjured up by the magic of the slam of his hand on the table.

But, as if he could read my thoughts, now he suddenly lifts his glass of water as if to collect himself, holds it half high and says with the joy of a child:

"Have I not God to thank that I can still hold this glass without trembling?"

The Joy of a Child

I feel that he means life whose clear source the glass encloses. But he quickly finds himself back among his jests, and as I again win a nickel, I ask him outright:

"Now, what would happen if I were to put this nickel out at interest for fifty years?"

He smiles to himself and says:

"Then you will be as rich as Rotschild!"

The answer was so roguish, the art of eluding the jest so graceful, the quickness with which he swerved to Rothschild and thereby dulled the double edge of my question, was so surprising that it seemed to delight him, too.

With perfect gallantry the 90-year old escorted us to our car, although it was late. In the lighted automobile I turned my nickel around, let it shine and repeated to myself softly a verse that the old gentleman made for himself, into which he enclosed his life and which sounded like this:

"My life has been a long happy holiday,
Full of work and full of play.
I dropped the worry on the way,
And God was good to me every day."

'I Have Made Everything By Peace.'

Do You Respect Your Children?

By Elsie Robinson

A 14-year-old girl staggering home at three in the morning—

A mother wringing her hands helplessly, blaming everyone and anyone save herself—

And in the background, a Nation, grimly watching this tragic spectacle, counting the cost with anger and with fear—

There is the picture this letter spreads before you.

It is a real letter. I wish it were not real. I wish it were the creation of an idle pen. But it isn't. It is the actual cry from a threatened home—and that cry is being echoed back and forth across America today. Perhaps you have heard it in YOUR home. If so, you will know the agony and bewilderment of the woman who writes.

Dear Elsie Robinson:

I read an article of yours lately about the wildness of modern youth. In the last sentence you asked "WHAT ARE THE MOTHERS DOING?" And I wanted to answer you and tell you the mother's side of the question.

THE MOTHERS ARE DOING THE BEST THEY CAN! I KNOW, FOR I AM THE MOTHER OF ONE OF THOSE WILD GIRLS YOU TALK ABOUT.

I had an enjoyable girlhood. I had looks enough so I was always popular and I was always taught that a woman who drank was the lowest creature on earth. So I guess I had as good ideals for my girls as any mother. But try and make them follow them!

As long as girls are in the grammar school they can be made to obey. But when they get into high school their obeying days are past and the trouble begins. IF A GIRL WANTS TO BE POPULAR IN SCHOOL NOWADAYS SHE HAS TO DRINK AND SMOKE AND PET. It doesn't matter what her mother says—obedience to mothers is a thing of the past. Mother's talk just goes over their heads.

I tell you, Miss Robinson, when a mother has to see her girl come staggering in drunk, and then gets abused for it in the bargain, it's a wonder that many mothers don't take their daughters' lives and not regret it.

I hope this will defend the mothers a little. God knows they need it, with all the criticism that is laid at their door. It isn't the mother who is responsible. THE HIGH SCHOOL IS TO BLAME. That's where the trouble commences. A Distracted Mother.

That's a hard letter to answer. One's heart aches for her misery and yet one's brain sees with ruthless clearness why that misery has come to her and her pitiful little daughter.

Never once in her muddled mothering has this woman had a strong, true vision of the relationship between a mother and child.

"Obedience days are past when a girl gets into high school," she cries resentfully.

OBEDIENCE DAYS SHOULD BE PAST WHEN A GIRL GETS INTO HIGH SCHOOL.

IF A MOTHER CANNOT HOLD HER GIRL SAVE THROUGH BLIND OBEDIENCE WHEN SHE HAS REACHED THE HIGH SCHOOL AGE, THAT MOTHER IS A FAILURE.

Do not misunderstand me. There is a place for obedience in the training of every child. There is a time when a child cannot appreciate reasoning or respond to charm and diplomacy. Tiny children, like little animals, must be taught to obey. But that unreasoning period in a child's life passes very soon and then mother love and mother wit come into their own.

Then the real lessons of life begin and the real relationship is established between the mother and child. It is not established through fear of punishment, through threats and scoldings or nagging advice. It is established through mutual love and trust and happy co-operation.

Then little daughter begins to desire sane, sweet living not because she has been TOLD to love sanely and sweetly, but because she sees sweet, sane living all about her and loves it for its own sake.

"Yeh, that sounds fine," sneers some unhappy mother, "and maybe it works with some girls and boys, but it won't work with mine."

It will work with ANY boy or girl. Children aren't born bad. They are born with eager spirits which will reach out hungrily for beauty and happiness if given half a chance. But they cannot be beaten or coerced into a love of goodness. And the parent who knows no method save beating or coercion is not fit to bear the name of father or mother.

"Yes, but how about this charge against high schools? Don't they put a lot of new notions in youngsters' heads? Don't they make them criticize their parents and rebel against home conditions?

THEY DO! THEY DO, INDEED! AND WHY SHOULDN'T THEY?

How long would the human race continue to advance if the 16-year-olds didn't get new notions in their heads—if they didn't criticize the old order and old ways?

Intelligent parents face this fact—they expect to be criticized—they expect to change. Indeed, if they are young of heart, they welcome the demands which forces them to change.

So in the true home, high school days do not mean wreckage and irritation. They mean new opportunity and progress for both parents and children. And if the loving understanding has grown with the years the change and adjustment come naturally and happily.

IT IS NO LONGER A MATTER OF OBEDIENCE, BUT A MATTER OF CO-OPERATION.

Girls that are loved generously and understood wisely do not "come staggering in at three in the morning." Boys who have found real friendship in Mother and Dad are not arrested for automobile theft or gang orgies.

But such harmony is not to be had for the wishing. Real Fatherhood, real Motherhood, is a full time job—requiring strenuous study and self control. The parent must grow as well as the child—the parent must be willing to learn as well as the child.

THE DAY HAS PASSED WHEN MOTHERS OR FATHERS CAN LIE DOWN ON TE JOB AND EXPECT TO GET RESULTS.

IF YOU WANT YOUR CHILD TO RESPECT YOU BE WORTHY OF RESPECT.

"MISSING"

By FANNIE HURST

trange Wisdom Comes To Man After Gaining Wealth.

ROM the time he was 11 years old, the dream had been taking shape. It was a simple dream that had to do with traw-thatched house, a low one-story one with leaded win-vs that opened out over a seaward view and a barn filled h homely cattle, and here, there and everywhere plenty of mneys with smoke curling upward.

That was about as definite as the dream was at first. As grew older, it took on variations. But not enough to lly change the pastoral simplicity of the Arcadia that was mped so vividly against the imagination of one Russell nd Cape, even after he had become an executive, a financier a magnate. There was something that seemed nothing rt of willful in the way the simple realization of this pos-sion seemed to evade Cape. During the long years of his ggle, he had been unable to afford it. When success e, it came so suddenly, so voluptuously, so enormously, t his dream found itself, translated itself into mansions and t estates.

'o be sure, there had been or two attempts to cap- the simplicity of the am. But when Cape's beheld the architectural as for the thatched cot--by-the-sea, the novelty t caught her interest, and idea gradually elaborated a superb example of a rman house, 150 feet in th and with beautiful med rooms and clevely-cealed sunken baths and a tic garden that had been borately planned by a fa-us landscape designer.

d as Cape's life, in the whirl-d of success, became more and e complex, the dream began to de, much as the exit of a tun-can recede as you view it from rear platform of a train that just shut out of it. In time, dream became a pin-point. pin-point, however, did not appear.

mewhere, against the retina of e's consciousness, it clung.

ERE were those who sus-pected Cape of being the un-py man that he was, but not n anything that he said, nor n anything he did. He moved ough the splendid panorama of surroundings with as much ce as the next one would have. was the head of a house that prised a beautiful woman, his , two beautiful daughters and oung man, his son, of promise ood as the average. Hundreds men and women were in his loy. Servants were at his and call. He had power, of mean sort, and position and ity.

ussell Hand Cape was a name conjure with not only in the al and industrial life of his mmunity, but the country over. The name of his firm was practically a household phrase. It could be said of Russell Hand Cape that he had built up the institution of his business brick by brick, mortaring those bricks with the tenacious quality of his own industry.

When he was 30, he was head of a Renaissance and stone-lace house on the most expensive acreage in th most expensive city in the world; of a Long Island estate, of an Adirondack camp that had 20 rooms and running water in every one of them and of the Norman house that overlooked Lake George.

One of Cape's daughters married an Italian nobleman of lineage close to the throne. Another married the son of the third richest man in America. This was the wedding said to be the most elaborate function of its kind that New York had ever seen. It was variously estimated by Sunday-supplements, gossip, society weeklies and the patter of two continents, that it had cost Cape, what with jeweled souvenirs, unprecedented floral display, special yachts, feasting and display, a cool $50,000.

THE Russell Capes had arrived with splendor and permanence of the kind that money and social position can assure. Viola Cape might have been pardoned a certain pride of achievement. In a way, Russell recognized his wife's captaincy, her brilliant social and executive power and her clear-eyed knowedge of what she wanted out of life.

At 45, what she wanted, she had. And at 50, Russell supposed in a way, that what he wanted, he had. It behooved him to suppose that. He was afraid to even doubt it. Men regarded him with envy. It was not that Russell was weary of the flesh-pots. He had struggled with his vigor, his ambition and his desire toward the goal he had achieved. It was just that at 50, a lassitude was on him. A lassitude, that visits to his physicians, spas, to his Adirondack camp, his Normandy house did not seem to allay.

For a while, it seemed to Russell that he might be indulging in the rich-man's well-known pastime—a nervous breakdown. This he pooh-poohed. It was just that he was tired. It was just that he was unsatisfied. Enormously unsatisfied. A dissatisfaction that began to cut brackets around his mouth and make it sag at the corners.

To what exeten this man, in the midst of life, had isolated himself from it, not even the members of his family quite realized. They only knew that Cape seemed to be in the throes of a depression that had nothing to do with business difficulties or any other condition they were able to analyze. It was not that they were particularly disturbed. There was little time for that and it was more than probable that it was the result of the overstrain subsequent to the royalistic functions that had to do with his second daughter's marriage.

THUS it was that the disappearance of Russell Hand Cape came in the form of an undiluted shock to his family. To the more perspicacious, this disappearance might not have been so overwhelmingly out of a clear sky, but to the world in which Cape had moved and had his being, it passed understanding.

He had gone out for a walk one evening after dinner, following the beautiful trail of pine woods that led off his estate, inland. That was the last. No subsequent stationmaster, fisherman, man, woman or child had beheld him after.

Detective agencies, radio announcements, posters, advertisements, searching parties were subsequently put into action. Everywhere he was listed and described in catalogues and lists of "missing persons."

At the end of the three years the disappearance of Russell Hand Cape was as much a mystery as it had been at the end of the first three days.

THE superb household of which Russell Hand Cape had been the head still moves grandly on. Russell Cape, Junior, has taken up his place as head of the tremendous business which has long since reached the stage where it automatically goes forward.

Society concedes that Mrs. Cape and her family are entitled to regard the husband and father as dead.

And they do, overlooking, however, none of the stray clues that every once in a while present themselves and invariably prove fictitious. Every year, Mrs. Cape, with one or two of her daughters and perhaps her son, crosses on one of the huge ocean liners for a few months' sojourn in a superb villa they have recently built on the Italian Riviera.

Sometimes, these great boats make a few hours' stop at a beautiful Mediterranean village called Funchal, situated on one of the Madeira Islands.

On these occasions, the inhabitants come crowding down to the shore to wave to the passengers that line the deck of the ship. It is quite a treat for them, offering a brief respite from their homely agricultural and handiwork chores.

FROM a small thatched farmhouse on the mountain-side, a house with mullioned windows and a barn for cattle and several chimneys that send up plumes of smoke, there invariably emerges on these occasions the figure of Russell Hand Cape. He is tanned, toughtened and fattened by now, and the brackets about his mouth have gone.

Sometimes, as he stands and stares at the ship anchored out there in the distance, his own wife and daughters and son are among the specks standing at the rail.

He stands regarding the distant ship with such calm.

It is the calm of a man who has come into strange wisdoms and secret meanings.

(Copyright, 1928.)

His wife, when she had time to observe at all, sometimes cast at him puzzled glances, a pucker between her lovely eyes. He supposed that he had what he wanted. It behooved him to suppose that. He was afraid even to doubt it.

Happiness Crowns Career

The BOOK SHELF For Readers and Writers by George Seibel

Americans Like That

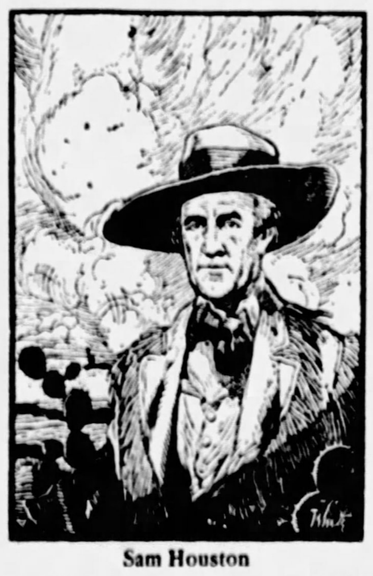
IOGRAPHY has taken such strides in recent years that it has come to al fiction as the favorite reading of ltitudes. Men like Emil Ludwig and muel Bradford must be ranked as fessional biographers. Where 50 rs ago we had only James Parton, lay there is a host of writers who ve into the past of interesting people d present them as they were—or as y may have been. For most of these iters strive to be interesting, dra-tic, and as veracious as possible. In field of American biography, for ex-ple, we have lately had lives of Rufus oate, Sam Houston and Pathfinder emont, which try to emulate the ills of romance and the spice of an-lote.

Americans like that revive the vision an American type that is adventur-s, not timid; generous, not grasping; big itself that it does not worship stness in anything else. Here is Rufus Choate, the Wizard of the w," as painted by Claude M. Fuess ublished by Minton, Balch & Co.) For a retaining fee of three or five dol-s, he displayed before a Danvers agistrate the oratorical power which d amazed Daniel Webster." In one se, as attorney, he obtained a verdict r the defendant, with costs at $3.98. One can imagine the size of the fee hich the defendant's lawyer charged!"

Choate took himself so seriously that the notorious "Dog Case" it is reorted that "he treated the dog as if he ere a lion or an elephant." The size the fee or the importance of the client d nothing to do with the conscientious re he bestowed on the preparation of brief or the delivery of a plea. Yet e was far from any petty vanity, and as amused by its exhibition in others. "What do you imagine your friend there thinking about?" he was asked when pompous lawyer was strutting across Common. "Well," replied Choate, ly, "I should guess, from his bearing, he is wondering whether God made or he made God."

hoate was called "the handsomest dy man in the world." He was a an lawyer, a profound scholar. He nn American of the old school—no r, or time-server, or worshiper of den Calf.

him might fittingly be named



Sam Houston

"Sam Houston, Colossus in Buckskin," whose life has been put together by George Creel (published by Cosmopolitan), Houston, president of the Lone Star Republic, brought Texas into the Union almost alone; but he has even greater interest as a type of the pioneer spirit during the epic days of our history. He was the Washington of the Rio Grande, and "walked with drama," in the words of Creel. From the day when the boy ran away from home to live in the wigwams of the Cherokees, to the day when he was arraigned before Congress for the caning of a fellow Congressman, and was defended by Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star-Spangled Banner," the destiny of Sam Houston was preparing him for that day of slaughter when he crushed Santa Anna's army and avenged the massacre of the Alamo.

Not the least of Houston's claims to greatness lay in the fact that "with clear eyes he saw the disaster that secession would bring upon the South, and by every means in his power sought to avert the tragic step." But the Confederates had their way, and Gov. Houston was driven from office. Mr. Creel declares that "a madness was upon the people, such as always attends the outbreak of war." As our American publicity director during the World War, Mr. Creel is an authority on this subject. But he also knows the picturesque life-story of Sam Houston, and has told it in a thrilling epic that will make Houston live for others.

Yet another great American of the pioneer age comes before us in "Fremont, the West's Greatest Adventurer," by Allan Nevins (published by Harper). His mother had eloped with her French teacher, yet they thought of educating the boy for the ministry. The headmaster of the school saw more clearly what was in young Fremont. "When I contemplated his bold, fearless disposition, his powerful inventive genius, his admiration of warlike exploits, and his love of heroic and adventurous deeds, I did not think it likely he would be a minister of the gospel."

The explorer of the Rockies, the Free Soil candidate for the Presidency, blazed the trail to our golden West and also blazed Lincoln's trail to the White House. His love of exploration was due to the poetic impulses of his being. Many of his minor traits will endear him far more than any of his achievements as geographer and political idealist. "He never hunted or fished, and taught his children not to take animals' life except under necessity. Trees were to him sacred, and he would not let them be cut down on our property, unless dead or dying." Mr. Nevins' life of this romantic figure is one of the best specimens of American biography since Beveridge's "John Marshall," and the two large volumes represent solid historical learning and laborious research.

Mother India Answers

Katherine Mayo's book, "Mother India," was bound to provoke a reply, and that reply has been written by Dhan Gopal Mukerji, whose little volume is entitled "A Son of Mother India Answers" (published by Dutton). He gives Miss Mayo credit for sincerity, but charges her with superficiality. It is difficult, after reading his refutation of many of her charges, to consider superficiality the worst of her offenses. She has tried to indict a people, which cannot be done. Mr. Mukerji may not succeed in undoing the mischief of "Mother India," but he has made a valiant effort to correct the worst of the wrong impressions generated.

The Yankee Peril

Prof. Melvin M. Knight has written a book, "The Americans in Santo Domingo" (published by Vanguard Press), which is an arraignment of our imperialist policy. The book is objective and remarkably smooth in temper. He seems to think the "Yankee peril" there and in other Latin-American lands consists of "the unpremeditated effects of our commercial efficiency, backed by highly organized and generally well-intentioned government services, which are nevertheless often blind to the consequences of what they promote."

The New Fiction

Trevy the River

Leslie Reid has written a beautifully imaginative piece of prose in "Trevy the River" (published by Dutton), a legend of England a hundred years ago. A boy was born in the mill overhanging the River Trevy, and his mother, keeping the name of the father a secret, names the boy after the river. He grows up to be so much at one with the stream that rumor has it he was sired by the river himself. His mother dies, and he sets forth to win his fortune. Coming upon the source of his river, he follows it downward to the sea. Leslie Reid's prose flows as placidly as the beautiful Trevy, and the story has deep charm.

The Sword Peddler

A swash-buckling, arrogant, lovable knave is hero of "The Sword Peddler" (published by Cosmopolitan). Thomas Grant Springer has created a new D'Artagnan, another Cellini, and launched him on a stirring career of adventure. Although more or less of a rogue, we readily forgive him, because he is such a delightful rogue. He commits villainies with so gracious a manner, so utterly sure of himself, that he succeeds from sheer bravado. The scene is laid in the time of James the First of England, and a great deal of the adventuring is along the ever-exciting Spanish Main. Pirates, treasure, hurricanes, and mutinies are there aplenty. It ranks with the best of Sabatini.

Red Rust

Cornelia James Cameron weights a comparatively light story with a mass of detail that makes most of "Red Rust" (published by Little-Brown) dull and dry. Matts Swenson, son of a Swedish immigrant farmer in Minnesota, after years of careful study and selection of grain, produces rust-proof wheat, which

To be sure, his marriage ends in the divorce court, but it has made him certain that golden law was not for him.

Migration

Too many novels of our younger generation would have made excellent short stories. Such is the case with "Migration," by David Grew (published by Scribner). The prairie farmland of the Dakotas causes keen suffering to Stacey Conrill, a dreamy and sensitive youth, who wants more out of life than he is willing to work for. Marcia Stoner, who has been to the city, returns to upset Stacey's life. When she runs off with a circus, his existence collapses, leaving him marooned on the farm where he must work for a living instead of dreaming. The characters are all young people, but the infantility of their thoughts and actions, scattered over a whole book, makes dull reading of what might have been a very revealing short story.

Deluge

S. Fowler Wright has caused a world-catastrophe in "Deluge" (published by Cosmopolitan). There is a night of frightful and unrelenting wind and earthquake, when practically all the known world is submerged by the sea and almost all the people are drowned. A few handfuls in a thinly settled region of England escape, and find themselves amid primitive conditions on a small island, all that is left of the once mighty empire. This imaginative romance of intense fascination supplies a supreme test of all our conventional civilized codes.

Strangers and Lovers

Edwin Granberry takes us to a little-known section of Florida in "Strangers and Lovers" (published by Macaulay). It is a fine study of human reaction to unfamiliar situations created by the urge for human companionship. The Lookout G...

Alice Ross Colver has chosen a man ... to death by incurable disease to be the hero of "The Lookout Girl" (published by Penn Publishing Company). He comes to a lonely cottage on an equally lonely lake in Florida, to spend his last days. The very first night he saves a beautiful girl from committing suicide. He offers her platonic marriage to dispel the shadows of her hidden past. She consents—adventures lead to love, and they "live happily ever after."

The Girl Everybody Knew

James Farrell is a super-modernist, and "The Girl Everybody Knew" (published by Harper) is a mad and merry extravaganza, a "story in jazz," illustrated by Eldon Kelly in appropriate style. The tale is outrageously frivolous in a brilliantly satirical vein, sophistication to the nth degree, post-impressionism applied to prose. Totally incomprehensible to the majority, it will be a rare delight to the few.

Palm Sunday Programs to Be Broadcast Over Radio

Among Those Who Will Entertain Radio Listeners-in Throughout Pittsburgh District

COMEDIAN—Les Reis, black-face entertainer, will be heard with Roxy and Gang in Monday night KDKA offering.

PIANIST—Lillian Bardoner will be heard in programs to come from the studio of WCAE Wednesday and Thursday.

DIRECTOR—Frank Black heads the Ampico Salon Orchestra, heard as a regular feature each Thursday from KDKA.

ACCOMPANIST—Mme. Lolita Cabrera Gainsborg, pianist, will accompany Godfrey Ludlow, violinist, in a Friday KDKA program.

VIOLINST—Jacques Thibaud will be the featured artist in the General Motors Party Monday night through WCAE.

Famous Faure Hymn To Mark Observance

Palm Sunday will be observed today in chain programs from the Pittsburgh broadcasting stations. At 2 o'clock WCAE will relay from WEAF, New York, a Palm Sunday program in the form of an interdenominational radio service.

Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, prominent New York pastor, will be the speaker. "The Radio Four" and "The Mozartians" will render the musical part of the program, to include Faure's famous "The Palms," which appears thrice on other programs. Following this service, at 3 o'clock, an address, "Palms or Victory," will be given by Dr. D. A. Polling, editor of the Christian Herald and president of the Greater New York Federation of Churches. At 4 o'clock another Paul Sunday address, "Humility and Empire," will be delivered by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, president of the Federal Council of Churches. His program will include musical numbers by the Gloria Trumpeters and the Apollo Club of Brooklyn.

TWO SOLOS ON PROGRAM

"The Palms" may also be heard through KDKA at 3:55 this afternoon, when H. T. Burleigh, baritone, will sing two solos as part of the St. George's Church vesper service. Mr. Burleigh's other solo will be "Ride On, King Jesus."

Four o'clock at WJAS is Cathedral hour, the program for which again will include "The Palms," to be sung by the cathedral ensemble, and another of Faure's compositions, "Crucifix," to be rendered by the cathedral soprano and baritone singers. "The Palms" may be heard yet again during the Emerson hour at this station at 9 o'clock tonight. The feature of this hour will be compositions by Franz Shubert, whose "Hark, Hark, the Lark" and "Who Is Sylvia" will be sung by the Bromo Seltzer quartet with orchestral accompaniment. Listed at 10 o'clock on the WJAS program are the American Singers, whose program will be in keeping with the day. The quartet will open with Parker's "Jerusalem," and tenor and basso solos will follow.

Perhaps the most interesting attraction of the day is that provided in the Symphonic hour at WJAS, when music composed for the first "musicians' strike" in 1772 will be heard. The music will be Haydn's Symphony No. 18, entitled "The Farewell." This work was especially composed for the members of Prince Esterhaz's orchestra, who played it to indicate to the prince that they were leaving. The numberse of pieces participating diminishes until only two plaintive violins are left. This hour, the initial program for WJAS, starts at 3 o'clock. The chamber music period, at 9:30, will offer as its outstanding number the madrigal from Debussy's early cantata, "The Prodigal Son." It will be rendered as a flute solo by R. Meredith Willson. This period also includes two Indian dances, to be played by the Court String Quartet, and a lullaby from Stravinsky's "The Fire Bird."

BAND TO CLOSE

WJAS will close with a program at 10:15 by the United Military Band, a 20-piece brass and woodwind ensemble. This program sparkles with such names as Sir Arthur Sullivan and John Philip Sousa.

The usual Sunday favorites appear on the KDKA program for today. The Gold Strand hour, at 1 o'clock, will feature the overture to "Die Fledermaus" (The Bat) by Johann Strauss, considered the best of Viennese operettas. Also slated for this hour are selections from "Hit the Deck" and a novelty number by a woodwind ensemble. Vocal and instrumental soloists will dominate the Roxy Stroll program, commencing at 2 o'clock. At 2 o'clock the One Hundred Seventy-sixth Field Artillery Band, under the baton of Lieut. Izzy Cervone, will broadcast directly from the Logan Armory at Oakland. At 4 o'clock Dr. Charles Heinroth, of the Carnegie Institute, will be heard in an organ recital. Malcolm La Prade, "The Man from Cook's," who has been taking his radio audience on vivid "tours" to various countries, will conduct his listeners to Palestine and Syria at 6:30. The march of events will be discussed in the Collier hour at 8:15. KDKA will close with a series of violin solos by Don Amazio, sentimental violinist, starting at 10:15. "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise" is Don Amaizo's feature number.

WCAE will go on the air as noon with an hour's recital by Katherine Palmer, soprano, assisted by the National String Quartet, in works of the French composer, Ernest Chaussono. Selections from "Carmen" and "La Gioconda" are included in the orchestral program of the Acousticon hour at 5:30. Bernard Nadelle, first 'cellist of the Capital Symphony Orchestra, will be introduced to the Red Network audience at 7:20. A Bible drama, based on "The Prodigal Son," will close the day for this station at 10:15.

Patent Situation More Muddled

WASHINGTON, March 21.—The radio patents situation has become more muddled, following decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on a tuned radio frequency invention, the Radio Protective Association announced.

By the decision, the patent of two German inventors, Schloemilch and Von Bronk, of 1914, is upheld and the famous Alexanderson patent, controlled by the Radio Corporation of America, was termed invalid because it was preceded by the German discovery.

WHY FARM RELIEF IS A MAJOR NATIONAL ISSUE

fixed costs. That is to keep on producing. So prices have continued low.

For the last eight years farm prices have ranged from 10 to 20 per cent lower than they were before the war, compared with the general price level. Debts increased during the war and farmers have since been unable to pay them, no matter how hard they worked or how rigidly they economized. Freight rates are comparatively inelastic and now consume a higher percentage of the farmers' product than before the war. Farm taxes have approximately trebled since 1916.

This price disparity, the farmers complain, has resulted in a transfer of wealth from country to city. They point out that agricultural wealth has decreased by about twenty billions since 1920, while industrial and corporate wealth had increased by that much or more. They show that farm debts have grown from about four and one-third billions in 1910 to about 14 billions in 1927.

Land Values Decreased

Simultaneously land values have decreased to about 80 per cent of the actual pre-war trading value. There has been a lot of talk about war-time inflation in the price of farms. Answering this, farmers point out that farm land in the United States as a whole failed to keep up with the general price inflation in this country during and after the war.

In the 12 forth central states—Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Wisconsin, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota—farm lands in 1910 had a total value of $17,284,000,000, according to the census. In 1920, at approximately the peak of farm land prices, the farm land of these same 12 states was priced in terms of 1910 dollars at only $14,904,000,000.

Thus even in 1920 farms lands in these 12 states had fallen behind the rising general level of prices in the country by more than $2,000,000,000. By 1925 farm lands in these states possessed only 79 per cent of their 1910 purchasing power.

This is an average. In some states the condition has been much more acute. Indiana farm lands in 1925, according to the census, had a purchasing power only 61 per cent of that of 1910. But the farm mortgages are still there.

Millions Leave Farms

More than two million people each year are leaving the farms for the city. This is offset in part by a counter movement from the cities back to the farm and by the natural increase in farm population, but the net shrinkage in the farming population has been large, amounting to about 640,000 last year, while the census for 1925 showed a net decrease in farm population of nearly four million persons since 1920.

In a word, the farmer's dollar, since the war, hasn't been big enough to go around. The effect has reached far into financial, industrial and commercial circles. Bank and commercial failures in agricultural states have multiplied. From 1910 to 1920 the United States had 66 bank failures; from 1921 to 1927 bank failures numbered 3,913. These were mostly in farm districts.

For example, the total number of bank failures in the East from 1910 to 1920 was nearly three times as great as in the period 1921 to 1927. In the West the number of failures since 1920 has been more than eight times the number during the earlier decade.

Demand Policy Changes

It has become apparent that the United States has a farm problem whose acuteness varies with the commodity or crop, and with the section of the country. This problem has many angles. Spokesmen of the farmers are demanding that national policies be changed. They want the United States to stop subsidizing increased agricultural production, and they want an effective bargaining power with which to match that of other groups with which they exchange goods and service, and whose price-making efficiency is constantly being improved in the modern industrial trend toward size integration.

Various attempts to relieve the agricultural depression have been made during recent years. Farm products were given attention in the emergency tariff act passed in 1920. Tariff rates were again increased by the Fordney-McCumber act passed in 1922, although the average rate of duty for agriculture still remained below the average rate of duty on non-agricultural goods.

Tariff Is an Issue

But if the purpose of these tariffs was to increase and maintain agricultural prices, they have generally failed. Tariffs are powerless to aid a crop of which normally we produce more than the domestic market requires.

It was in connection with the tariff that the agricultural surplus first began to receive general attention, although the subject is by no means new. A bounty on agricultural exports as a means to make tariffs effective was advocated by the National Grange 30 years ago. Other countries have found ways to handle crop surpluses with less disaster to producers than occurs in a state of unorganized marketing.

The rural credits act was adopted to supply a new form of credit fitted to farmers' needs. It, with its older sister, the farm loan act, helped farmers to hang on, but failed to raise or stabilize prices. Farmers complain that they do not want an opportunity to borrow more money, but do want prices that will pay off debts already accumulated.

Surpluses Work Harm

In 1920 the idea of commodity co-operative associations as the means to secure orderly marketing began to spread over the country from California. Co-operative associations handling wheat, tobacco and cotton were established at about the same time. These were based on long term legally enforcible contracts binding members to market their crops through central agencies.

Much was promised and expected for these business organizations, but here again the disastrous effect of agricultural surpluses has been felt. To withhold a seasonal or year's total surplus from the market can be effective in stabilizing and maintaining prices only if the surplus for the entire crop is handled, not merely the portion of the surplus for which members of co-operative associations as producers are responsible.

When co-operative associations undertook to hold off the market, store and dispose of the surplus for all producers, experience soon proved that they were incurring risks of loss and operating costs which taxed their members severely while resultant benefits went to the outsiders as well as members.

This experience on the part of the major co-operative associations has led them to support the McNary-Haugen bill. They want legislation that will enable them to handle crop surpluses, with the costs and risks borne by all the producers in proportion to their benefits.

Legislation Sought

The wheat co-operatives were the first to seek this legislation. The corn belt followed, then cotton, then rice, then tobacco. More recently, although for different reasons, the largest co-operative dairyman's association in existence has joined in the support of this type of federal legislation. The Dairymen's League of New York, which operates in a number of eastern states, has indorsed the McNary-Haugen bill.

This support came not because the measure promises immediate or direct benefits to the dairy industry, but because of apprehension lest the shift to dairy production will transfer the surplus problem in part, at least, to dairying, unless steps are taken to stabilize and help producers of staple crops.

The American Federation of Labor supports the measure on the grounds that farm purchasing power must be increased if labor is to be satisfactorily employed, and that continued farm distress is transferring farm labor to cities, thus intensifying competition for jobs.

Before discussing actual provisions of the surplus control measure now pending in Congress it is well to examine the nature of agricultural surpluses. Farm groups do not consider them as the cause of the economic difficulties to which agriculture is subject, but rather as the barrier in the path of attempted remedies.

Differences Shown

The Senate Committee on Agriculture, in reporting the bill with its approval on March 8, points out that there is a fundamental difference between the surplus problem in agriculture and that of industry. It is possible for a manufacturer to adjust the volume of his production closely to the estimated requirements of his market. This the farmer can not do, since in many crops the weather and pests have more weight than acreage in determining total yield.

Winds, drought, floods, boll weevil, corn borer, wheat rust and other pests and diseases make the accurate adjustment of the production of agriculture to estimated demand in order to avoid a surplus on the one hand, and national under-production, possibly famine, on the other, out of the question. For example:

In 1920 the corn acreage of the United States (approximately 101,000,000 acres) produced at the rate of 31.5 bushels per acre; in 1924 the yield was 22.9 bushels. On the same acreage base for those two years the variation in total yield due to weather and other factors beyond the farmers' control was 558,000,000 bushels.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the acreage in corn in 1927 was about a million acres less than in 1926, but the estimated production increased by nearly 100,000,000 bushels on the reduced acreage.

The average United States cotton acreage for the years 1921-1924 was 35,000,000 acres. The yield was 124.5 pounds per acre; in 1924, 156.8 pounds. The variation in yield variation in those years, due to uncontrollable influences, amounted to 2,225,000 bales on the average acreage.

The 52,000,000 wheat acres which produced on the average 18.5 bushels per acre, a total of 962,627,000 bushels in 1924, yielded only 12.8 bushels per acre, a total of 669,305,000 bushels in 1925. The difference which no degree of foresight or organization on the part of the farmers could have prevented was nearly 200,000,000 bushels of wheat.

In other words, the same acreage that yielded barely enough wheat to supply our domestic requirements in 1925 had produced a gigantic exportable surplus the year before.

Influence Is Felt

The effect of crop surpluses on agriculture is felt along two major lines which also are described in the Senate report.

"(1) Seasonal variations in yield result in destructive price fluctuations that can only be prevented by effective provision for carrying products over from fat years to lean years, thus securing a price based on supply and demand over a period of years rather than for one year. This is particularly important in the case of cotton and corn.

"(2) We produce, and we cannot well avoid producing, a surplus above domestic requirements of certain agricultural commodities. This surplus must be sold in competition in the world markets. It is sold at the world price. But the surplus for export is not segregated from the supply for domestic consumption. Consequently, the world price to a large extent determines the price for the entire crop.

"Under these circumstances, our agricultural tariffs, to a very large extent, are inoperative. The effect of the world price upon the entire crop can be removed by removing the exportable surplus, so that the domestic price will be protected by the tariff whenever this is necessary to prevent domestic prices from being unduly depressed."

These are the conditions the surplus control bill is intended to reach and remedy. Its mechanism, its economic basis, the arguments for and the objections to it will be discussed in later articles.

Ray-O-Vac "B"—the "B" battery with Cell-Pocket construction!

The ordinary "B" battery, as you know, is encased in a solid block of pitch. In manufacture, this pitch is poured at extreme heat, requiring hours to cool.

Heat stimulates chemical action in the battery cells, wastes electrical energy, shortens the battery's useful life.

Recognizing this, Ray-O-Vac developed and patented its exclusive Cell-Pocket construction—each cell in a separate insulated pocket.

Ray-O-Vac "B"—built better to begin with—comes to you with its superior electrical energy unimpaired by a hot pitch application!

No wonder Ray-O-Vac is known as the long-life radio "B" battery!

And now, the new lower Ray-O-Vac prices make the best battery power also the cheapest!

Seals of Silence

By Roy Vickers

The Nurse Stumbled to Her Feet and Stood Like a Whipped Dog, Awaiting His Next Words.

CHAPTER I.

Out of the Fog.

IT had been a crisp November morning and London had sparkled in the pale sunshine. By midday had come a yellow pall, shutting out the light so completely that the street lamps had to be lit. By late afternoon the fog had descended, so that the strongest arc lights became dim red points, casting no radiance, and London's myriads groped and swore and blundered.

In the city of Westminster a simple combination of stained glass panes in the east window of St. Seiriol's Church had attained that for which science had struggled in vain, and the lights of the church, shining through the window, were visible for twenty feet. Passers-by could plainly see the blood-red figure of the saint, his hand upraised.

At the curb an elderly taxi driver tapped on the window of his cab.

"Won't go, miss—Sister," he amended as he noted the nurse's uniform. "It's the engine. Hour's work or more."

The woman stepped out.

"Where are we?" she demanded.

"Well, we should be in the park, but you can never tell."

"Where are we?" she asked a passer-by, an old man, who grunted and passed on. This time she uttered an oath. The taxi driver, taking the money she held out to him, peered into her face.

By the light of the saint he saw her face was the most beautiful but the most evil he had ever looked on. She drew angrily back from his scrutiny.

"Don't you know what church this is?" she demanded.

"No, I don't," retorted the taxi driver. "But it won't do you no 'arm to go in."

The woman moved away, laughing contemptuously. Then she ran into a tall figure, and the laugh ended in a half-stifled scream. Before he could apologise he was lost in the fog, but she had seen that he was a clergyman.

"Nature's Gargoyles" That Closely Resemble Notre Dame's Stone Beasts

THE gargoyles of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris are famous the world over for their fascinating ugliness. "The visitor who climbs the towers," writes a Parisian, "finds himself suddenly transported into a strange world worthy of the imagination of Beaudelaire or Poe. At the angles of walls, crouched on parapets, leaning against galleries or dangling over the void, is a race of mythical monsters, serpents, demons forked and horned, jeering, threatening and grimacing. It makes one dream of some fantastic menagerie changed to stone by an enchanter's spell."

Just what are gargoyles? The word, sometimes spelled gurgoyle, comes from the French gargouille, meaning the throat or gullet. In architecture gargoyle meant, originally, the carved termination to a spout which conveys away the water from the gutters. In Egypt there were gargoyles to eject the water used in the washing of the sacred vessels, which was done on the flat roofs of the temples. In Greek temples the water from the roof passed through the mouth of lions whose heads were carved or modeled in marble or terra-cotta. At Pompeii large numbers of terra-cotta gargoyles have been found which were shaped in the likenesses of various grotesque animals. Of late years gargoyles have lost their utilitarian purpose and are merely ornamental adjuncts to buildings. They are to be found by the thousands all over Europe and also in the United States. But the most interesting and varied assortment of them is at Notre Dame Cathedral.

The fancy of the artists who created these gargoyles gave shape to the most unexpected forms. It is an interesting circumstance to note, however, that nature has equalled, if not excelled, these sculptors in the creation of animals which are more gargoyle-like than gargoyles.

An inspection of the London Zoo or, for that matter, any metropolitan zoo, reveals many strange species in insect and animal life that, artistically, may be regarded as living caricatures. Particularly is this true in the case of monkeys and other simians, and sometimes of bats. Simians present so many interesting parallels and often such grotesque prototypes of human qualities that staid science might easily be tempted to believe that nature has her frivolous as well as her serious moments.

The pictures on this page show how alike are the living gargoyles of nature and those of stone on the towers of Notre Dame. The American bat from Guiana bears a striking resemblance to one of the gargoyles on the south tower.

The American Monkey, With Gaping Mouth, Which Is Not Unlike the Stone Creature Pictured on the Right.

Another Notre Dame Gargoyle, With Mouth Agape and With Remarkably Simian Features.

Another figure is very similar in form and attitude to the American monkey, and there is also a stone prototype of the slow-footed loris, an animal from India.

The mystery is, how did the medieval sculptors reproduce in stone likenesses of animals which they had never seen? Some of the creatures were unknown to Europeans for centuries after the deaths of the sculptors who carved the stone prototypes of these very animals.

The sculptor of the gargoyles of Notre Dame has not come down to history. He must always remain anonymous. More than any other artist, he recognized the possibilities of the gargoyle as decorative parts of a church edifice. It is said that in creating these figures, he prescribed, as it were, a sermon in stone. He showed in his carvings the monstrous spirits of human greed, cruelty, pride and cunning. All the evil he saw in the marts, mansions and palaces of France he translated into the stone images, which still leer from the cathedral towers upon the crowded streets below.

The Slow-Footed Loris, an Indian Animal, Whose Stone Prototype Is Shown Opposite.

A Medieval Parallel of the Loris Decorating a Parapet of Notre Dame.

The great carvers of gargoyles were the masons in the century before the birth of Shakespeare. They were roving artisans, wandering from country to country, and they relished a chance to show their skill at carving figures of stone. They had a keen sense of humor and frequently expressed it in the making of gargoyles. If the priest whose church they were building tried to make them work for less money than they thought fair, the masons would leave in some prominent place a carving of a fox preaching to a flock of geese, and the face of the fox would be a caricature of the money-loving clergyman. Then, very likely, the fat village squire would be portrayed as the figure of gluttony, while the notorious drunkard of the village would find himself portrayed in some ridiculous attitude. There was such an intense admiration of the art of the sculptor that the men of this guild seem to have been able to do as they pleased.

They were, in fact, the caricaturists of their day, using stone and marble instead of pen and ink, and creating cartoons which were to live for centuries instead of weeks.

Another theory concerning the gargoyles of Notre Dame is that they are supposed to represent the spirits of evil which used to work mischief among the people of Paris in olden days. Now, hundreds of feet above the scene of their former exploits, they are chained to the tower of the Cathedral, which is supposed to have nullified their evil. There is no doubt that some of the goblin gargoyles looking down on the streets of Paris seem to have wistful expressions on their ugly faces, as if regretting the fact that they can no longer move among the people.

Sometimes the stone grotesqueries on cathedrals tell stories and parables. On the walls of the Salisbury Cathedral appears the little tale of the fruit-stealers, in three panels. The first shows the thieves going to the orchard. The second shows them picking the fruit. And in the third the farmer makes a sudden appearance and collars the thieves. The figures have all the animation and caricature qualities found in a modern comic strip; in fact, this series of three panels might well be called a comic strip in marble.

The famous Chartres Cathedral contains hundreds of stone carvings, and while there are not many gargoyles, most of the figures partake of the caricature qualities of the comic strip. The Wells Cathedral contains several carvings illustrative of man's ailments. One shows a man with a thorn in his foot; another shows a man with a toothache; a third depicts a man holding his stomach, as though he had just dined on a dozen green apples. The purpose, apparently, was to show how the mortal body is heir to numerous ills.

Some of the gargoyles owe their shape to the chimaera of Greek mythology. Originally the chimaera was a fire-breathing female monster resembling a lion in the forepart, a goat in the middle and a dragon behind, with three heads corresponding. The more modern chimaera was usually represented as a lion with a goat's head in the middle of the back, as in the bronze Chimaera of Arezzo, of the fifth century. The word gradually grew to mean any fantastic idea of fiction of the imagination, particularly as to form, and the gargoyles of Notre Dame may be called chimaerae.

Banknotes To Immortalize Her Face

MUSSOLINI, dictator of Italy, has introduced numerous innovations in the government of Italy, but none more drastic from the viewpoint of tradition than that which he recently ordered in the matter of a new issue of Italian banknotes.

From time immemorial the coinage and paper money of nations has contained the portraits of the kings and generals, the great men of the realm, and queens and princesses. Even in the United States this tendency was preserved. Occasionally, as a special mark of distinction, the portrait of a private citizen might appear on a special stamp issue, but never on money.

Mussolini wanted to make the banknotes of Italy beautiful as well as valuable. He had succeeded, more or less, in bringing the lire measurably to their prewar parity. Now he decided that reform was necessary in the printing of the notes.

Italian history was replete with beautiful women. There were the Borgia women, including the famous Lucrezia, whose beauty was undeniable, despite the fact that she was over-fond of poisoning her friends and lovers.

But no, that wasn't what Il Duce was driving at. He wanted to print on the banknotes the portrait of a beautiful woman of the Italy of today. He wanted to find the most beautiful woman in his country, and her reward would be the use of her face on the paper money. It was a drastic departure from tradition, but a pronouncement from Mussolini is rarely contested.

The contest was won finally by Signorina Hilda Piccolo, whose portrait appears on this page. This is the beautiful face which will appear on the new Italian banknotes. It is an unique honor, and if the experiment of Mussolini proves to be successful, other nations may adopt the idea, and the beautification of paper money will proceed apace. It has been suggested that if this is ever done a new fad will spring up—the collection of paper money as a fad similar to that of philatelism, the collecting of stamps.

Nebraska's Oddest Marriage Tangle

AN unusual succession of family marriages, in which the four Colerick brothers, of Alliance, Nebraska, have married the four Sisley sisters, also of Alliance, recently came to a climax, and also an end, when the Widow Colerick, mother of the Colerick brothers, and Widower Sisley, father of the Sisley sisters, quietly went down to the courthouse, secured a license and got married. All eight of the "children" attended the wedding reception.

It took seventeen years to get all the Colericks and all the Sisleys married, and now Alliance breathes a little easier, but the marriage license clerk and the preachers are a little bit gloomy.

Alliance folks had sort of become used to the Colericks and the Sisleys marrying. The marriage of one Sisley girl to a Colerick boy was not a sensation any more in Alliance. It was the usual thing.

Of course, over at the Ladies' Aid Society and in the Sewing Circle and at the Missionary Meeting there was more or less speculation as to when the next Colerick-Sisley marriage would take place, but the fact that a Colerick fellow didn't marry a Sisley girl was more newsy than if they did marry. It was positive that whenever a Colerick or a Sisley got married at all, it was to one of the other name.

So, after all the Colerick boys had married all the Sisley girls there was nothing left to do but that old man Sisley should marry the Widow Colerick, and he did it.

Seventeen years ago the Sisleys and the Colericks got to marrying each other. Both families were ranchmen. The Sisleys lived eight miles north of Alliance. The Colericks lived twenty-two miles south of town. But the young folks met at dances and at round-ups.

One day Melvin Colerick and Bertha Sisley came to the Alliance courthouse and secured a marriage license. The wedding took place in the church, as did the long line of Sisley-Colerick marriages thereafter.

Found—Trail Of Prehistoric Insects

SEVERAL thousands of years ago a regiment of ants left their hill to conduct warfare against an enemy tribe. As they have done ever since ants were, they marched in straight lines, with no officers marching at the front or at the sides of the line of march.

They marched across the mud of a jungle morass. About them were great tree ferns, some over a hundred feet high, which stood with their stems in the slime, surrounded by a thick tangle of soft mosses and fungoid growths. Amidst the luxurious primitive vegetation crawled and glided many strange creatures, all unaware that in a moment their world would be wiped out. Then there must have come one of the periodic cataclysms which changed the aspects of life as well as the outlines of geography. Ants, crawling and climbing creatures, jungle, all were buried in the great disturbance. But the record of the march of those prehistoric ants remained in the mud, to become petrified as the centuries marched past.

Only the other day, in a quarry of sand stone near the town of Nierstein on the Rhine, in Germany, several stones were discovered bearing on their surface queer marks. Scientists who examined the stones said they were the tiny footprints of the regiment of ants that marched across the jungle pool mud thousands of years before the record of civilization began.

Lindbergh And The Bottle

THE photograph of Colonel Lindbergh, on the left, with one of the guests at a luncheon given in his honor in Managua, Nicaragua, has stirred protests by prohibitionists.

The School Board at Interlaken, New Jersey, passed a resolution that the famous flyer was "framed" by having the bottle put on the table.

But there is nothing on record to show that the popular Ace objects to a bottle upon the table, or disagrees with the many millions of worthy Americans who think that there is no sin in drinking a glass of wine at dinner.

His Own Judge, Jury and Executioner

Young Stedman Chokes His Fiancee in a Jealous Rage, the Girl Faints, He Imagines He Has Killed Her—Then, Overwhelmed With Remorse, He Implants a Farewell Kiss and Leaps to Death Under a London Subway Train

1.—"Kiss Me, Vi!" Young Stedman Said, as He Drew His Sweetheart Toward Him. Realizing That the Kiss Was Given Unwillingly, His Hand Slid to Miss Laing's Throat, His Face Transfixed With Jealous Fury, His Eyes Glaring Into Hers, and She Fainted.

2.—As the Limp Form Fell Into His Arms, Stedman Believed the Girl Was Dead, and Gently Laying Her on the Floor He Took One Last Farewell Kiss and Rushed Out of the House.

3.—In Despair at the Thought That He Had Unintentionally Choked Out the Life of the Girl He Adored, Stedman Hurried to the Nearest Station of the London Subway, Paused on the Platform to Write in His Diary the Words, "I Have Killed Vi"—And Then Hurled Himself to Death Under an Approaching Express Train.

LONDON, March 23.

"I HAVE killed Vi.

"I will meet Vi in another world. She kissed and caressed me while I was doing it. But I gave her the best and last kiss—when she was dead."

Such was the unsigned message found in the diary of the young man, afterwards discovered by Scotland Yard to have been Edgar Stedman, when his body was found on the tracks of the London subway, where he had hurled himself in front of a train in his eagerness to expiate that deed of which he had written.

It was a pathetic diary, even before it reached the high note of drama of that last entry. And it tells the story that pretty Viola Laing in court tried in vain to recount with composure, describing his emotions, his hopes and fears with a candor and passion that make it a striking human document—a document that in the beginning he never intended any eye but his own to see.

Stedman's first entry, made some months back, speaks of the turning point in his life, that great event from which he believed that he was to gain heavenly bliss, and which brought instead death.

"I met Viola Laing," he writes, "the loveliest girl I have ever seen. Vi. Viola. Music in every sound of it. Bless her. Shall change my church for hers. See her Sunday mornings as well as afternoons that way, I hope."

A few days after he made this entry in the diary:

"Viola is the dearest girl in the world. Wish she did not have to work. Hate her to meet other chaps. Shall propose as soon as I dare. Memo: Ring up house agents. Would like to find a home that will be just right for her. Tiny villa on Thames perhaps. Remember, tell agents no premiums."

Poor Edgar, with his dream-home, for which he could not afford to pay a premium. And how human is that entry, which shows the mingling of the romantic and the unlovely necessity of considering money even while one rhapsodizes over one's lady love. A little later he wrote:

"I am the luckiest fellow in the world. Vi really loves me. We will marry as soon as possible. Must hurry those blamed house agents. Note: Phone tomorow. Vi let me kiss her. Most divine moment of my life. I love her more than anything on earth."

For weeks such entries continue, still full of exclamations of adoration and joy straight from the young man's heart. Now and then there come little accounts of houses he has visited on the banks of the Thames—in his search for the home that will be "just right for my beloved Vi." And then:

"I can't believe that Vi would go out with another man. Shall I ask her or would it be an insult? Can't stand the suspense. Must ask her. Must know whether he made love to her."

On the following day he wrote:

"Vi has double-crossed me. She did go out with Lacey. Can hardly write his name, I hate it so. She made a joke of it. Joke! Goes out with another man and laughs. I think my heart is breaking."

For two or three days there are no entries. Then comes:

"Terrible trouble between Vi and myself. It's all Lacey. May he die soon! Vi declares that she won't marry me. Note: Ring up house agents—partly their fault, being so slow to get a home for us; if they'd been quicker, there would have been no time for Lacey to get hold of my darling girl. There will be no home now. They can stop looking. Can hardly believe Vi does not love me after the way she kissed me and the things she promised. Shall make one more desperate attempt to win her back. Beautiful, lovely, darling Vi. Will never let her belong to Lacey."

The following day's note was sinister enough in the light of later events:

"Saw Vi for a last explanation. She still laughed. Awaiting revenge."

From this point the story, which had belonged exclusively to the lovers themselves, became a problem which rivetted the attention not alone of Scotland Yard, but of all England. The public was mystified because it learned the sequel before it had heard the beginning, a sequel sad enough and dramatic enough to be the theme of some highly colored melodrama, rather than a train of events involving two hitherto normal and rational and seemingly quite average young people.

It was a day or two after the "revenge" paragraph had been written in the diary that the newspapers were filled with accounts of a young man who had killed himself beneath an express train as it rushed into a London subway station. Although a tall and handsome man, about twenty-five years old, there was not one distinguishing mark by which to identify him. There was not one scrap of writing to be found upon him save that fateful confession, "I have killed Vi."

Who was "Vi"? And was she really a victim of murder? Or was the whole thing, the girl's very existence, perhaps, the figment of a fevered imagination? From what point of vantage should Scotland Yard begin its investigation?

The first step taken by that great police organization was to comb the country for news of missing girls. And then they found themselves in a fresh dilemma. There were two girls named Viola who had vanished mysteriously from home! Was one of these Violas dead—slain by the man who had written the dire confession?

And when the baffled Yard was trying to trace the movements of the two Violas, each of whom respectively disappeared some weeks previously, enlightenment came from an unexpected quarter, and a new story was told—a story that added a touch of the Macabre to the death of the unhappy Edgar Stedman, but that told the welcome news that the missing portion of the tragedy, the presumed murder, was to have an unlooked-for ending.

The girl round whom the drama centers, in a special interview, takes up the story from where the diary leaves off, or rather from the entry just before the last sinister words were written. She is Viola Laing, of course, the "Vi darling" whom poor Edgar hoped to meet in a happier world than this.

She is an attractive girl, with the clear skin typical of English beauty, wide eyes, and a soft expression of appeal in their depths. Although essentially a laughter-loving, sunny natured girl, at present she is sad, transformed into a grieving, sorrowful woman, youthful joyousness overshadowed by memories of her recent ordeal, and her heart made heavy by the catastrophe that has overwhelmed her.

"It is too terrible," Viola said to the writer. "In all sincerity I cannot blame myself, and yet, at times I feel as though I had murdered Edgar with my own hands. The dreadful thing he did could have been averted, I suppose, had I been more patient, or had I loved him better.

"He came to see me quite often, and I was attracted toward him. But he more or less swept me off my feet, or I should never have promised to marry him. I could not have married him. There was a quality of intensity about him that frightened me, a passionate jealousy that made me realize that I could not be happy as his wife. This jealousy was absurd, since this man, Mr. Lacey, showed me nothing more than the ordinary courtesy and attentions. I am a country girl and had no friends in town, save one or two girls that had been to school with me, and through whom I met poor Edgar—'Geg,' as he was called for short.

Miss Viola Laing, Who Fainted Under the Choking Grasp of Her Jealous Fiance and Was Left Behind as Dead by Her Lover.

Edgar Stedman, Who Condemned Himself to Death for a Crime He Supposed He Was Guilty Of.

"I tried, very gently, to make Geg understand that I could not marry him. I told him that I was not the marrying sort. And he took it into his head that it was because Mr. Lacey was in love with me. Once an idea lodged in his mind, no earthly power could shake it. No protests of mine, no vows could make the slightest difference.

"The situation was becoming more and more difficult, and I did not know what to do. Geg had always been very kind to me, save in his fits of unreasoning jealousy, and I had no wish to wound him. Nevertheless, I wanted my freedom.

"At last my opportunity seemed to have come. Mr. Lacey asked me to accompany him to a dance, and, wanting to ask his advice, I consented. It was a ball to which Geg's sisters were invited, and, as I was very friendly with the Stedman family, by this time, I arranged to meet his sister May there. That, I imagine, is how he heard about my being there. I wished him to know it, of course, for I resented the rather tyrannical attitude he adopted toward me.

"On the following morning Geg called. At the house where I had rooms, I had the use of the owner's parlor, and it was there that I received him. I noticed when he came in that he looked very pale and as though he had not slept.

"'Vi,' he said to me, 'you are playing me false. You were out with another man last night.' I said that it was untrue and unjust to put it like that, but that it was perfectly correct that I had been to a dance with Mr Lacey. I wanted to make as much of the incident as possible, so that he would release me and give me back the liberty for which I longed. And I foresaw that unless I could induce him to give me up under the impression that he was doing it on his own account, I should find myself trapped and bound by my promise, and thus plunged headlong into a life of misery.

"I asked him to sit down and talk things over quietly. He refused and stood towering over me. 'I am fonder of you than of anything in the world,' he said. 'If you should give me up, I would soon end it all.'

"That rather frightened me, and so I laughed to reassure myself and told him not to talk so absurdly. I had struck the wrong note, alas, for he straightened up, and with a look of dreadful anguish and rage stooped and putting his hands on my shoulders, lifted me up to standing position.

"'Kiss me, Vi,' he said. I, too, was getting angry, and I refused.

"'Say that you are sorry for going to a dance with Lacey,' he commanded. I said, 'No. I am not sorry.' His hands slid from my shoulders and curled round my throat. 'Kiss me, Vi,' he implored again, and because I was vaguely frightened, I did.

"Whether he realized that my kiss was not so ardent as he wished, or whether it was intended as a farewell embrace, I shall never know, now. But he kissed me passionately, as though he would never let me go, and, suddenly I felt the hands which were round my throat as though to caress me, tighten.

"His grip grew tighter. I realized in a flash that he was killing me. I tried to say, 'Don't,' but my voice died in my throat, a blurred, feeble little sound. His eyes were glaring into mine—I could see no other features, just two eyes like those of some wild jungle beast, in a patch of dead-white face—eyes of fury, filled with mad hate, with the desire to kill.

"A thousand thoughts rushed through my mind in less than a moment. I pictured myself dead. I saw as vividly as though it were real, my mother sobbing. I saw Geg being tried for his life. And absurd as it may seem, I could see in my mind the newspaper accounts of my death. All this was in a space of time that I dare say was less than ten seconds actually. And then those dreadful eyes seemed to be coming nearer to me and the death-clasp round my throat was lost in suffocation. I felt as though my chest would burst with the effort that I was making to get the air that was so cruelly out of my reach, and my heart pounded so that each beat was a separate agony. And then those animal eyes seemed to come closer than ever to mine. And I saw no more. When I next became conscious I was in bed, a doctor and my landlady at my side."

Viola Laing, mercifully, had fainted. That and that alone had saved her life. For when she fell, limp and white, into her lover's arms, he thought that she was dead. According to his diary, he took one last kiss from the girl he had loved so passionately that he would have preferred to kill her with his own hands to seeing her care for any other man, and left.

Then he must have realized the fatal consequences of his act, that he had become a murderer and that never in this world could he see the adored Viola again. That none might suffer when he was beyond reach of pain, he penned his last words of confession. And then he rode by train to another part of London, and getting off at one of the stations, waited until an express was dashing past to throw himself under it, his own judge and jury and executioner.

Meanwhile, just as he had been leaving the house where Vi was staying the landlady, a motherly soul, who took an interest in her pretty and attractive young lodger, saw him go. Bidding him good evening she remarked that he was leaving early. And he answered so absently that he would return in a few minutes, that her curiosity was aroused. She decided to go into the sitting room to see whether all was well with Viola.

When she entered the room, Viola lay on the divan. She spoke to her. The girl did not reply. Until a doctor, hurriedly summoned, managed to get a faint moan in answer to his ministrations, she thought that Miss Laing was dead.

It was many hours before Viola could collect herself sufficiently to sob out the story on the sympathetic landlady's bosom.

The next morning Viola was too ill, and the landlady too busy nursing her to read the papers. Thus the search of Scotland Yard continued for a whole day and night before Viola learned that her sweetheart, leaving her for dead, had inflicted upon himself the supreme penalty for killing her!

"I would have married him, even had I hated him—and I did not hate him, although I did not love him—rather than have had such a tragedy happen," sobbed Viola, as she concluded the interview. "And that he killed himself believing me dead when I was still alive, but could not give a sign, lift a finger to assuage the worst of his agony, is a thought that will torment me to my dying day.

"In court, I was asked whether I was in love with Lacey. I am not. I shall never be in love again. To some girls, the word 'love' conjures up visions of bliss and rapture, of lifelong joy and happiness. To me it spells tragedy. That, I suppose, is the price I must pay for my longed-for freedom, the craving for liberty that made me drive the man who adored me into trying to murder me, and then into killing himself under the illusion that he had succeeded."

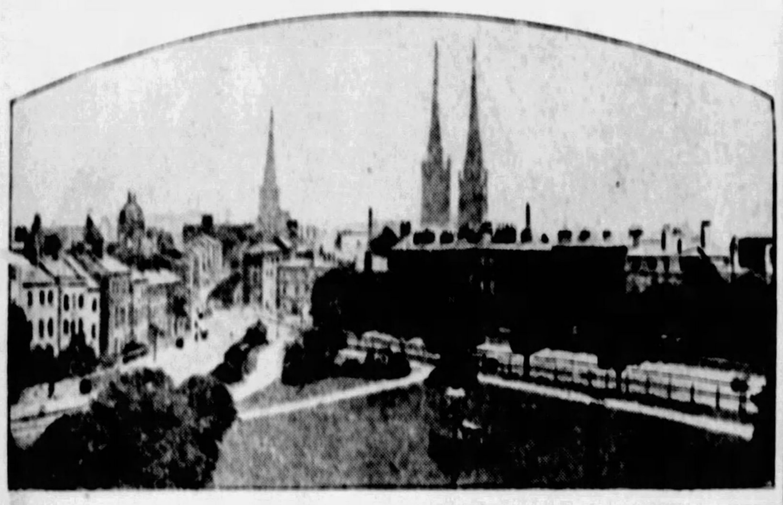
At Last, A Tablet To Mark The Tomb Of Lady Godiva



View of Coventry and the Famous Three Spires Mentioned in the Poem.

LONDON, March 22.

NO. 8 PRIORYROW is the address of the Coventry Insurance Committee of Coventry, England. The famous town of the Three Spires, with its crooked, winding streets, its gentle slopes, its old buildings, has changed less than most of the other towns of Great Britain. But No. 8 Prioryrow is, more or less, Twentieth Century. Certainly the insurance building does not suggest medieval times. Yet the office building stands on the site where once was the ancient Benedictine Abbey.

Past the church, one day—about a thousand years ago—there rode, "clothed only with chastity," the beautiful wife of the Saxon Earl Leofric, lord of Coventry. The people of the city had suffered grievously under the Earl's oppressive taxation. Lady Godiva had appealed time and again to her husband, who had obstinately refused to remit the tolls.

At last, weary of her entreaties, he said he would grant her request if she would ride naked through the streets of Coventry. Lady Godiva took him at his word, and after issuing a proclamation that all persons must keep within doors and shut their windows, she began her ride, clothed only in her beautiful long hair. Only one person disobeyed her proclamation, a tailor, ever afterward known as "Peeping Tom." He bored a hole through his shutters so that he might see Lady Godiva pass, and is said to have been stricken blind as a result.

Some time in the early part of the eleventh century Lady Godiva died, and was buried in a portico of the Benedictine Abbey Church, which stood on Hill Top, and where now the insurance office stands. Since then her story has been told in prose and verse, famous artists have made paintings of their ideas of her sacrificial ride, she has been made the heroine of plays, songs have been written about her, she has been carved in statue, and her exploit has become one of the legendary stories of history. But her existence is by no means legendary. It is certain, by indisputable evidence, that she lived and died in Coventry. Yet there never has been a tablet or monument to mark the spot where she was buried. One of the best known characters in history, her last resting place in the centuries which have gone by since she died, has been ignored by the antiquarians and historians who have gone out of their way to honor less interesting personalities.

"Lady Godiva," as Visualized in the Famous Collier Painting, Riding Unclothed Through the Streets of Coventry, in the Vicinity of the Old Abbey Where She Now Lies Buried. The Ancient Buildings Have Given Way to an Insurance Office.

One of the members of the insurance committee, J. C. Lee Gordon, has undertaken a campaign to remedy this lack.

"And From a Heart as Rough as Esau's Hand, He Answered, 'Ride You Naked Through the Town.'"—A Print Depicting the Earl's Brutal Order to His Wife.

Recently he appealed for funds for a tablet in memory of the famous Lady of Coventry.

"The site of the burial place of Lady Godiva and her husband," commented Mr. Gordon, "is not of interest only to Coventry people, but has an appeal to the other side of the Atlantic and throughout the English-speaking world. These premises—the offices of the insurance committee—are undoubtedly the superstructure of Leofric's and Godiva's tomb, and there is no written record of the fact available to the public."

The subscription of funds was immediately accomplished, and a tablet will now mark the tomb of Lady Godiva.

Records show that about 1040, Godiva aided in the founding of a monastery at Stow, Lincolnshire, and three years later she persuaded her husband to build and endow the Benedictine monastery at Coventry. She is commemorated as benefactress of other monasteries at Leominster, Chester, Wenlock, Worcester and Evesham. She probably died a few years before the Domesday survey (1056-86), and was buried in one of the portico crypts of the abbey church. About the time of Richard II, a window with representations of Leofric and Godiva was placed in Trinity Church at Coventry.

The Godiva procession, a commemoration of the legendary ride, instituted in May, 1678, as part of Coventry Fair, was celebrated at intervals until 1826. From 1848 to 1887 it was revived, and recently further attempts have been made to popularize the pageant. The wooden effigy of Peeping Tom which, since 1812, has looked out on the world from a house at the northeast corner of Hertford Street, in Coventry, represents a man in armor.

Where Your Silk Stockings Come From

A Japanese Girl Feeding Mulberry Leaves to Voracious Young Silk Worms in a Factory Catering Especially to Silk for the American Stocking Trade.

MADAME, where do your silk stockings come from? Few who wear them know the long and interesting story of silk which begins with the eggs of a small grayish moth from which are hatched a small white worm, and ends with the gleaming, sheer hose for sale in the glistening shops of the large cities.

Most of the European silk is raised in Italy, but its volume is trifling compared with the great Asiatic production in Japan, China, Bengal, Cashmere and in Russian Central Asia.

Silk manufacturing, on the whole, involves more handiwork, and consequently production is more dependent on the skill and general efficiency of the worker than in cotton and wool industry. In the Orient, the craft of silk manufacturing is in many cases a hereditary trade.

One of the major problems of the industry is providing food for the silkworms. The most approved food for the worm is the leaf of the white mulberry tree, which is specially cultivated so as to produce large quantities of leaves. Silkworms are reared in light straw or rattan trays. The worms, when hatched, are the size of little ants. At this time from 30,000 to 40,000 of them can be accommodated on eight square feet of tray space. Fully grown, the same number require over 800 square feet of tray space.

The rearing occupies about a month, during which time the worms shed their skins four times, emerging after each moulting larger and hungrier. Their capacity for eating is enormous. In one Japanese silk factory, which especially manufactures silk for the American stocking trade, there are girl employes whose sole duty is to feed the voracious worms. They devour twice their weight in mulberry leaves almost as soon as they are born.

Full-sized worms are about the size of a cigarette. At maturity they cease feeding and raise their heads, which is a sign they are ready to spin. They are then put into baskets and taken to the cocooning beds. Each worm selects a crotch among the twigs, and spins its cocoon. This may be regarded as the first direct step in the manufacture of milady's sheer silk hose.

Alley Cat Wins Prize At Show

IN a recent cat show at Buffalo there were two entries which represented the north and south poles of the feline species. One was a big blue male Persian, named Mayhew London, the property of Mrs. C. C. Crum, of Binghamton, N. Y. Another was a male white cat whose moniker was merely Tommy.

Mayhew London had been to numerous cat shows. He had more blue ribbons and silver cups than he knew what to do with. His lineage was ancient and honorable. When he was judged with the other members of his class, he was awarded the first prize, and yawned. It was an old story with him.

With Tommy it was different. Tommy was making his debut in a show. In the matter of pedigree, Tommy was vague. If the truth must be told, he had found his way into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Probst, in East Aurora, from a previous locale unknown, but very likely an alley.

But then his pedigree was conspicuous by its absence. One of the basic principles of a cat show is lineage. The judges want to know not only who you are, but who was your father and mother, and their parents, and so on as far back as possible. Like the humans, the cats had their Blue Books, their social registers, their Almanachs de Gotha. There was the feline four hundred and the feline four million. To the latter class belonged Tommy.

Imagine the amazement of all concerned, then, when Tommy, participating in the Domestic Cats class, was awarded first prize. He purred his satisfaction when a ribbon was hung on his cage proclaiming him the champion of his class. It was a momentous moment in his life.

New Device Keeps Chorus Girls Thin

THE gym of "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien, located in the heart of Broadway's white light section, is now more sonorously entitled "The Flesh Reducing Institute", and Mr. O'Brien's clients, who, a few years ago were almost 100 per cent. men, are now almost exclusively women.

A visit to the place almost any day will disclose as many chorus girls as are in evidence in the quarters of the Chorus Equity Association. For the word has gone out that reducing by pills or by too strenuous diets is not the best way to acquire and keep slenderness of form. Mr. O'Brien puts the girls through a course of exercise which keeps them in the pink of condition.

One of the new and rather complicated devices in use at the Flesh-Reducing Institute is known as the Automatic Ring-Roller Massaging Machine. The subject stands on a small platform, a switch is pulled, and a series of steel hands, in the shape of springs, massage the body with a force and energy possible only by machinery. The machine is said to have accomplished wonders in the matter of reducing fat around the hips.

There are other special devices and apparati. One such is called the Reducocycle. It is, in effect, a bicycle enclosed within a cabinet. The rider's head emerges from a hole in the cabinet, the rest of the body being enclosed in a space that is not only airtight but electrically heated. This machine goes the steam bath one or two better when it comes to general weight reduction. Twenty miles on the Reducocycle removes from two to five pounds.

"In a class of 22 fat women," said the impresario of the Flesh Reducing Institute, "we succeeded in getting off a total of over fifty pounds in one day. In a period of a month each woman in the class lost an average of 26½ pounds. One woman, who weighed 291½ pounds when she entered the class, registered 259½ pounds at the close of her first month's treatment, a loss of 32½ pounds."

Where Graves Cost More Than Homes

IN AN Arabian colony in Egypt the homes of the people are noteworthy because of their drab shabbiness. They are, for the most part, huts or houses made from crumbling stone. Not very far from the community is another, also occupied by Arabians. But in the case of the latter, the Arabians are dead. It is the cemetery of the colony.

The grave city is far more splendid and ornate than the city of the living. The tombstones, made of expensive and fancy stones and marbles, are ornate and designed with the utmost artistic grace. It is evident at a glance that there is not a single house in the city of the living which costs anywhere near as much as the meanest of the tombstones in the cemetery.

From a distance the cemetery has the appearance of a futuristic dream. Whether by accident or design, the general plan of the stones follow the futuristic plan which has been so popular of late years in general interior and exterior decoration. Most of the stones represent a lifetime of saving on the part of the person who lies buried beneath it. For this is the philosophy of the tribe which lives here:

"We live in this world but a few score years at most; in the other world life is eternal. Is it not better, then, to concern ourselves more with our habitation in the next world than in this?"

Some of the tombstones are inlaid with porcelain, and others have semi-precious stones set into them. There are caretakers of the cemetery whose duty it is to see that the tombstones are kept fresh and clean, and when the color scheme on any of the stones begins to fade, they go over them and brighten them up.

The people of the colony, as soon as they are old enough, to begin to earn any money, begin to save for the fund which is to buy them their ornate stone to mark their resting place.

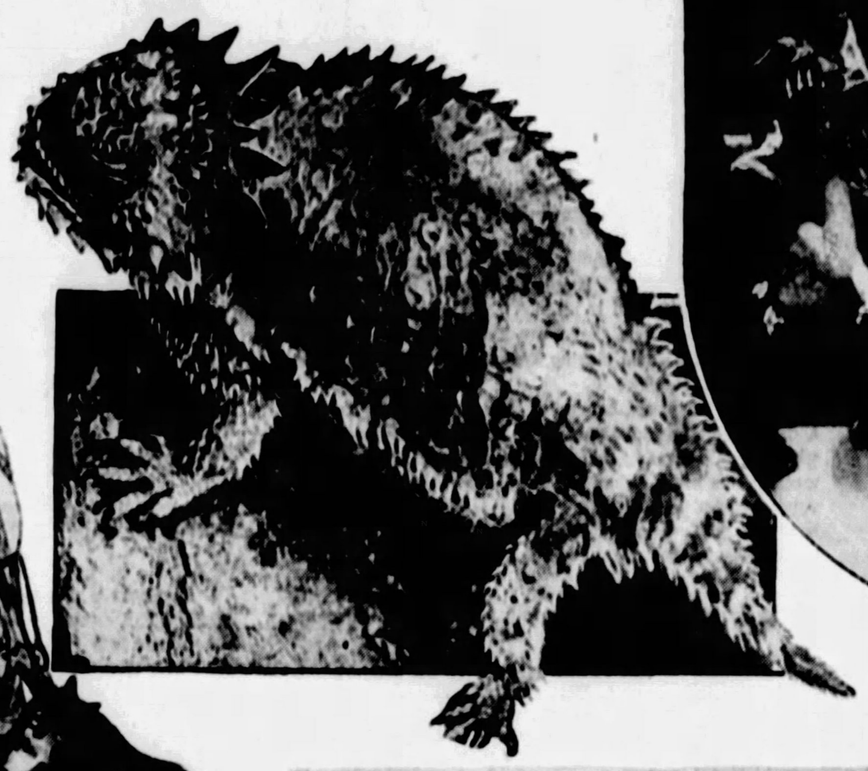
Science to Find Out if Animals Can Live Without Food or Air

The Horned Toad Found Alive After 31 Years Sealed Up in a Texas Court-House Cornerstone Stirs Investigation of the Mysteries of Hibernation and "Suspended Animation"

The Raising of the Daughter of Jairus by the Saviour.—From the Painting by Albert Keller. In This Instance Actual Death May Not Have Taken Place and the Young Woman May Have Been in a State of Deep Coma or What Is Popularly Known as "Suspended Animation."



The Famous Texas Horned Toad, a Shrunken Descendant of the Great Armored Dinosaurs of Prehistoric Times.

One of the Buriats of Siberia, Who Are Said to Be Able to Pass Into a State of "Suspended Animation," Like the Bears and Other Animals, During the Long Siberian Winter.

Fishes Are Frequently Found in Ponds Frozen Stiff in the Ice. But When the Spring Sunshine Melts the Ice the Fish Thaws Out and Resumes His Activities Where He Left Off in the Fall.

The Bear, Like the Skunk and Many Other Animals, Curls Up in a Cave in the Fall of the Year, Goes to Sleep, and Lives for Many Months Without Food or Exercise and Very Little Air. But He Wakes Up in the Spring and Resumes His Activities.

NEWSPAPER readers are familiar with the widely published news that a live horned toad was taken out of the corner-stone of the old court-house at Eastland, Texas, the other day when the building was torn down. Residents of Eastland of excellent reputation insist that this creature has lived for thirty-one years sealed up in the foundation-stone of the old building.

The discussion which this little Texas horned toad has started in scientific circles reveals the fact that science knows very little about one of the most remarkable phenomena of animal life—hibernation, hypnotic sleep, "suspended animation" and the explanation of why "dead and buried" human beings occasionally come to life again in their graves.

The horned toad of Eastland, Texas, has started investigations which may lead to definite information as to whether it is possible for any animal to live for thirty-one years without food or water or air. A consignment of 24 Texas horned toads have just been received by the Philadelphia Zoo for investigation by Professor C. Emerson Brown, and other zoologists and biologists have sent for specimens for tests.

It has, indeed, been suggested that a better scientific understanding of nature's method of hibernation, which permits the bear to curl up in a cave in the Fall of the year and sleep through the Winter months until the warm Spring sun awakens him, might have an important application to human beings. Overtired bodies, nerves worn threadbare might, it is suggested, be benefited if nature's machinery of hibernation were studied, understood and applied to man.

In fact science already believes hibernation is controlled by one or two glands and these glands are known. Indeed, there is evidence that the human mechanism, as well as that of the lower animals, is able to respond to nature's scheme of hibernation, and instances among the Eskimos of the Far North seem to bear out the belief that, perhaps, prehistoric man himself may have curled up alongside the bear, the skunk and the other animals in the cave and passed the rigors of prehistoric Winters without food, physical activity and very little respiration. Evidence comes, also, from the Buriats, a semi-barbarous race of Russianized Mongols that they are able to go through the long Siberian Winter in a condition of partly suspended animation.

The story of the Texas horned toad began on a hot Summer's day in 1897. A courthouse was being built in Eastland and the builders were considering what to put in the hollow inside the cornerstone. Remembering the popular idea that frogs and toads may be locked up alive in rock and live there for hundreds or thousands of years, some one suggested putting a horned toad in the hole.

The Texas horned toad is not really a toad at all, but is a short, broad variety of lizard. On his head and around his neck are rows of moderately sharp horny points, much like the similar decorations of some of the ancient lizards a dozen feet or more long, creatures fortunately extinct for millions of years. The little horned toad of the Texas deserts comes honestly by this resemblance, for he is the shrunken descendant of those self-same great reptilian beasts. The horned toad can pass into a Winter's sleep for some time or become torpid similarly when deprived of water. Whether he can remain so for thirty-one years is another question.

What happened thirty-one years ago when the cornerstone of the Eastland courthouse was laid is now a matter of dispute. Some citizens say that they remember the living toad being sealed up. Others are less sure. It is unfortunate that better records were not kept.

Recently the courthouse was torn down, the cornerstone was taken out and opened. The contractor who opened it tells a remarkable story. Inside the dusty cavity there lay, he reports, the body of a horned toad, just as some citizens assert it was laid there thirty-one years ago. When the animal was removed from its thirty-one-year burial it was discovered, to everyone's astonishment, to be alive. It is alive still, and reported to be now on exhibition in Eastland.

That is the story as Eastland tells it. If every detail of it were proved with the unmistakable assurance which scientists require of their data it would be the most remarkable instance of hibernation on record, for no creature that indulges in a Winter sleep makes the nap last as long as thirty-one years and no experiment of length even approaching this has ever been carried out. Unfortunately, there are enough possible loopholes in the Eastland evidence to give the scientific skeptics a chance to doubt.

There is at least one expert of international reputation who rises, however, to the defence of the Texas story. He is Dr. William T. Hornaday, famous zoologist and former head of the Bronx Zoo in New York City, one of the great animal collections in the world and one of the foremost centers of scientific research on animal problems. Dr. Hornaday does not assert that the Texas story is correct, for he was not there either to see the toad placed in the stone or removed from it. What he does is to suggest that, after all, a sleep of thirty-one years may be possible.

What science knows about these habits of Winter sleep tends, on the whole, to confirm Dr. Hornaday's faith. Probably no important feature of animal life has been studied as little as has the matter of hibernation. Yet it is probable that either a horned toad or any other hibernating creature can reduce its vital activity so low that only the tiniest amounts of air are necessary and no water or food at all.

Everyone is familiar with the fact that many common animals, like bears, hedge hogs, raccoons, badgers, skunks, ground squirrels, bats and others, have this habit of sleeping through the Winter. In other lands there are other hibernating animals. There are even some that go to sleep not by the signal of cold, but by some other one, like the African fish that burrow into the mud of the river bottoms when the streams dry up during the dry season and remain there, torpid and without any water at all, until new rains again fill the stream beds.

Virtually all insects pass through torpid periods, resembling hibernation. Most of the frogs, toads and reptiles can hibernate when food is short or when the temperature is too low. In countries infested with bats all the caves and abandoned roof spaces in buildings will be found full of torpid animals of this family during the season when there are no insects for the bats' food. There are even kinds of fish which can survive being frozen in solid ice for months and which will revive and swim off as if nothing had happened as soon as the ice melts.

These animal feats of keeping alive without any of the things that make ordinary life possible require profound changes in what goes on inside the body. In warm-blooded animals like the bear or the ground squirrel, the most astonishing of these changes is in the body temperature. The hibernating animal falls into a profound and lasting chill. Dr. Vernon Bailey, the distinguished zoologist of Washington, D. C., told the Biological Society of that city not long ago that in true hibernation the skin temperature usually falls as low as 44 degrees Fahrenheit, only ten or twelve degrees above freezing. In a recent investigation of the hibernation of ground squirrels Professor George E. Johnson of the Kansas Agricultural College found even more remarkable figures, for some of his hibernating squirrels cooled off until their bodies were less than two degrees away from being frozen solid.

More significant for the theory of hibernation even than the temperature are the observations made by Dr. Bailey, Professor Johnson and other scientific men on the breathing of animals in their Winter sleep. Active ground squirrels, Professor Johnson reports, usually breathe from one hundred to two hundred times a minute, probably using a cubic foot of air in about a quarter of an hour.

When hibernating, these same animals breathe, he found, only three or four times a minute. One animal took only one breath every two minutes; less than one one-hundredth of the breathing which the same animal would find necessary when active. Dr. Bailey's testimony is even more definite, for he reports that in some hibernating animals no sign of breathing can be seen at all.

All other vital activities that have been measured show similarly large decreases. The heart beat of his hibernating ground squirrels slowed, Professor Johnson found, until it was only five or ten beats a minute instead of the usual two hundred or three hundred beats in the same time interval. The blood flows very sluggishly through the hibernating body, little air is used, almost no body heat is generated; everything that makes a creature alive falls, if not quite to zero, at least to a very low ebb.

Digestion seems to stop altogether. What the hibernating animal lives on, to provide the small amount of nutriment necessary during the Winter sleep, is the substance of its own body. Professor Johnson found that some of his hibernating ground squirrels lost as much as four-tenths of their body weight.

During hibernation the bodily activities are turned inward. Instead of drawing nutriment from the food and supplying this to build up the muscles and other tissues, the blood draws out the very substance of these tissues, bit by bit, and uses it to keep the fire of life from going out entirely. The question is how low can this level of vitality fall? How little food and air can an animal get along with and not die? How long can it live? Is the thirty-one years claimed for the Texas horned toad a possibility?

These questions science cannot yet answer. More searching studies must be made of the chemistry and biology of hibernation. Thanks to the interest aroused by the Texas toad, it is probable that they will be made.

Such studies might be of great interest, even of practical value, in quite different directions. It was Dr. Vernon Bailey who pointed out two years ago to the American Society of Mammalogists that it might be possible and wise for human beings to hibernate. Great cold begins to induce such a state even on present-day human beings. In Siberia the peasants spend much of the Winter in long sleeps, not unlike the behavior of a bear that is sluggish but not quite hibernating. Arctic explorers record, Dr. Bailey stated, that whole days could be spent in a sleepy, half-conscious condition, the victim arousing himself for a few minutes once or twice a day to eat a little seal blubber or other food.

These symptoms look much like the beginnings of human hibernation, an ability that might be trained and increased. It is unlikely that what used to be called "suspended animation" is possible, if by that is meant the entire stoppage of all vital activities. Indian "fakers" and others who allow themselves to be buried for hours or days probably do not stop altogether the activities of their bodies, but merely depress them; slowing the breathing and heart beat and perhaps decreasing the body temperature, much as happens to a hibernating animal. There is no reason to believe that this does mankind any good. Probably, on the other hand, it does no one any great harm.

What Dr. Bailey had in mind in suggesting possible benefits of human hibernation was something different. He thought of it as a nerve cure. Were it possible to send nervous patients off into a deep sleep for six months or a year, every vital activity being depressed while the sleep lasted, the rest might be a marvelous remedy, Dr. Bailey suggested, for nerves jangled by too much modern life.

The possibility of actually doing this, while not definitely foreseen, is by no means a fantastic dream. It is reasonably certain that hibernation is due to a change of activity in the gland system that controls the rate of living of the body. There are at least two of these glands, the thyroid gland in the throat and the adrenal glands, one of which is placed just above each kidney. When these two varieties of glands are exceptionally active their owner is nervous, energetic, bustling about from one thing to another. He is apt to have a mild fever. On the other hand, when these glands are below normal in activity the individual is fat, lazy,, sleepy—almost on the verge of hibernation.

No one can make definite predictions about physiological things, not actually submitted to experiment, but it seems probable that if a way could be found to decrease the activity of these glands without injuring health in any other way, artificial hibernation might be possible; either a hibernation of nervous humans for an extreme rest cure or a forced hibernation of other animals for some purpose desired by man.

A distinguished New York engineer, Mr. Edward R. Hewitt, recently suggested a way in which such hibernation might be of great practical value. There are many northern countries, he says, in which cattle cannot be fed during the Winter, although the Summer feed is ample.

Why not, says Mr. Hewitt, send them to sleep? Why not drive them, by some kind of special gland food, into hibernation for the months in which grass is scanty? That would enormously increase the wealth produced in such northern countries in the form of dairy products.

It is probable that some natural effect on the gland system is the signal that starts off hibernation in the animals that have this habit. The first symptom of oncoming hibernation, in many animals, is the accumulation of fat. That is also the first symptom of a decreased activity of the glands. If scientists inspired to study hibernation by the supposed example of the Texas horned toad succeed in finding out what it is that acts thus on the glands they may open up important new chapters in man's handling of domestic animals or in human life itself.

Secrets of Caruso's Home Life

The Widow of the Famous Grand Opera Tenor, in a Book Just Published, Reveals Interesting Episodes, Incidents and Curiosities Behind the Scenes at Their Family Fireside

Caruso and His Baby.

MRS. DOROTHY CARUSO, widow of the world's most famous tenor, has published an intensely interesting book about her late husband. Here we meet the great singer as only his wife could see him. The son of a laborer, with the habits of a peasant, speaking the queerest English, yet possessing the greatest natural gift of its kind in the world, he could command an income of $10,000 an hour. The fasting and strange habits needed to keep his voice in condition, the topsy-turvy life inflicted on his family, his childlikeness, his love of female adulation are set forth most entertainingly.

Receiving Inspiration from the Pianola—Sketch Made by Caruso Himself. From "Caricatures by Enrico Caruso," by Permission of La Follia di New York.

From "Wings of Song," by Mrs. Dorothy Caruso (Published by Minton, Balch & Co.)

THE first time Enrico Caruso dined with us he wore a gray-blue Tuxedo suit with blue velvet lapels, white silk socks and black patent-leather slippers. When he arrived he had on a flowing cape and a wide-brimmed felt hat, a little on one side. I thought it a strange way to dress, for I had never seen anything but the conventional black and white for dinners. But I thought perhaps all tenors dressed that way, until he explained that his costume was one that had been made for him to wear as Flammen in Lodoletta, the new opera he was singing that Winter. Not thinking it striking enough for his part, he had decided to wear it off the stage.

After we were married I asked him what had become of the costume and he roared with laughter and said it was the only time he had worn it. Then he added, "You know, I think I wanted to make a good impression the first time I came to your house."

I KNEW little about music. I knew even less about singing. But I had a remarkable memory for useless things—for instance, the words of old songs once popular on Broadway. The more banal the song, the more likely I was to remember the words. My sister was equally accomplished, and so, to Enrico's amusement, we sang to him everything we could remember. He would shake with laughter and beg us to go on, and sometimes he would pick up one of the tunes and sing with us. He specially liked "Under the Bamboo Tree" and insisted that the words were Italian: "If you lik-a me, like I lik-a you."

* * *

CARUSO was such a versatile person, he had so many interests that it seems almost a paradox to say that he was uneducated. And yet in the accepted sense of the word, that is true. He had the knowledge that comes from wide experience of the technic of singing, or drawing and of modeling. He knew sixty-four operas, he spoke seven languages. But he never read a book or pretended to any knowledge of literature. He had never regularly attended school when he was a child.

In one of his letters from Mexico he thus describes an outdoor performance of an opera:

> At moment to go on the stage there was illumination plenty by the sun. I had like a shower of rays in my eyes, terribly hot like a Shweedish bath. I was forced to close my eyes and it was impossible to look at the conductor. One sang with me who had a voice which bark like an old dog doing "Whau, whau!" Who you say, is that? But I do not tell you, because he is my companion, so I go on singing with bag of sunshine in my face.

IT was at a moment when I was looking my worst on a hot Summer day in New York, that a former friend of Caruso's drifted in upon us, a cool vision of beauty. She was like a snowflake in a simoom. With beads of perspiration springing to my brow, I struggled to my feet as Enrico led her forward. When she politely congratulated Caruso on his marriage I sank back on the sofa, realizing the painful contrast between us and hopelessly aware that there was nothing I could do about it.

I was intelligent enough to understand that many women must have been in love with Caruso, but I was always a little afraid of these old friends from the past who knew Enrico so much better than I did. There was no limit to their flattery, and Enrico accepted their adulation with unashamed pleasure.

We saw the Cool Lady at all too frequent intervals. During the Winter Enrico sent her tickets for his operas, they lunched together. She dropped in casually "just to say one little word of appreciation for your great art"; later without any excuse at all. One afternoon in March when baby was three months old the Cool Lady telephoned she would stop to see us at tea-time. Enrico was not yet home, but I was feeling well and happy and ready to cope with any dragon, so I said I would be delighted to see her.

When Enrico came he went to work on an artistic cabinet he was making. He left off his shoes and stockings. There was grime on his face, as he struggled on the floor, and the baby cooed with delight.

As he rose to his feet, he saw the disillusioned face of the Cool Lady. We left him alone, and he did not reappear until the Cool Lady had taken a silent departure.

HE told me, with some hesitation, about his two sons. I think he realized that the knowledge of that part of his life might turn me against him. But instead I only admired and respected him the more, and had only sympathy for the love he had lavished so freely for those young days that had later brought him so much sorrow. He had not been able to legalize his early marriage, but when his sons were born he hastened to recognize them in the courts of Milan and to give them his name.

Enrico told me also of his mother. Although she died when he was fifteen years old, his devotion to her was one of the deepest emotions of his life.

For her son, Anna Caruso made many sacrifices. As he said, "My mother went without shoes so that I could sing."

Of the twenty-one children born to her he was her favorite, the flower of her heart. Of him she expected great things, and there is a touching reason for her belief. She had a patroness and friend who was a lady of noble blood. At the time of Enrico's birth this lady also gave birth to an infant who died soon after it came into the world. Hearing of her friend's illness and the despondency into which she had been thrown by her baby's death, Anna Caruso hurried to her side and placed in the lady's arms her own newly born babe, Enrico.

Anna Caruso believed that from this noble foster mother her baby drew into his tiny being superior qualities that set him apart from her other children.

Enrico's father, Marcellino, seeing his son strong and intelligent, put him to work in a factory; but nothing—hardships, work or discouragement—could stop his singing.

AFTER I was married to Mr. Caruso we ate at any time—sometimes not at all. If Enrico was practicing no one thought of food. If he was having an important conference nothing was said about a meal. If he slept late in the morning, the day would start with luncheon, and on particularly busy days we might have only a cup of coffee until an eight o'clock dinner.

Enrico's suite at the Knickerbocker consisted of his bedroom, dressing-room, the secretary's room, the studio, drawing-room, dining-room, a pressing room and a room for the valet. After we married he engaged an adjoining suite with extra bedrooms and a drawing-room for me. In the old suite he transacted business, received his friends and studied, but the new suite he looked upon as his home, where we might live as much as possible away from the world. At intervals during his busy hours he would stroll over to see me, and as it would have hurt and astonished him not to find me, I was always there. During our life together I left him only once, to go to a luncheon.

AROUND eleven or twelve o'clock at night Caruso would suddenly announce that he was hungry. Probably dinner would have been forgotten and I might have had nothing but a cup of coffee since breakfast. But I never reminded him of meals, because I preferred to wait until he was hungry and eat with him. So in the middle of the night he would send for an enormous loaf and a minute steak which the chef arranged in the form of a sandwich. Enrico would fall upon this ravenously, while I would try to eat it with some degree of delicacy. In the end I had to give it up, and the midnight suppers to an onlooker must have appeared to be orgies indulged in by famished souls.

When I found that I was to be so much in the house I bought some lovely house gowns and negligees. But Enrico said such things were pretty but not useful. He did not think they were good to work in and not at all appropriate for pasting stamps and putting in clippings. So he designed for me gowns cut something like a man's dressing gown, made of the most beautiful brocades. They were certainly very comfortable, even if at times they were rather warm.

AT a banquet Caruso rarely ate anything, but as the meal progressed he gradually collected all the menu cards, on which he drew caricatures of the guests, to their great enjoyment. He had an astonishing faculty, which no doubt is the peculiar art of the cartoonist, of seizing instantly upon the characteristic feature of a face and turning it into a burlesque of that person. Caruso had in his possession a collection of all the cartoons published in the American newspapers during the war.

One day we passed the window of a bookstore in which was displayed a caricature of President Wilson which he had drawn. It was signed E. C. Enrico stood close to the glass staring at it, his nose pressed against the pane like a small boy. At last he sent me in to ask the price of it. When I returned and told him it was seventy-five dollars he was overcome with astonishment and delight. I think the thought of that seventy-five dollars pleased him more than the $10,000 check he received for a concert.

ON the day Enrico sang at the opera the routine of the day was different. The doors between the two apartments would be opened at nine o'clock and we would wake to the sound of music. Salvatore Fucito, the accompanist, would be in the studio playing over the music of the opera to be sung that night.

Enrico would drink a cup of black coffee, take his bath and an inhalation, all the while listening to the music and whistling or humming an accompaniment. Dressing was a machine-like routine that had to be followed exactly. Two valets assisted him, and they were not allowed to speak to him or to make the slightest noise or any unnecessary movement as they went about their duties. Silently and noiselessly they handed him his clothes, shoes, collar, tie, handkerchief, while Caruso continued to hum in time with the distant music, glancing occasionally at the score that was propped on a music stand near by. The reason for this automatic procedure was that Caruso might give his entire attention to the opera.

WHEN Caruso was a young man living in Naples and was doing the military duty required of all young men in Italy, he used to go into the armory when no one was about and try to sing loud enough to fill the great building. One day his sergeant heard him and offered to take him to Vergine, who was at that time the best-known singing teacher in Italy. Enrico accompanied him nervously to the home of the maestro, where Vergine received them and listened indifferently while Enrico sang for him.

When he finished, Vergine said: "You can't sing. You haven't any voice at all! It sounds like the wind in the shutters!"

ON the nights Enrico sang we passed the day very quietly. No business was transacted; there were no auditions, no visitors and no practicing except the gentle humming that went on for a short time in the morning. It was never quiet in the apartment.

To escape from this tumult, we would drive to the outskirts of the city and, leaving the car, walk for a mile or two where we could be alone, with no one to stare at us. We returned in time for luncheon, which on such days consisted of consomme and cold chicken taken in the seclusion of the apartment. During the afternoon Enrico rested or played solitaire.

At six o'clock Fucito, the accompanist, would return and for ten or fifteen minutes would play exercises while Caruso would let his voice out to its full volume. It was the only time he used exercises of any kind. While singing he would walk up and down the room, stopping only when Punzo appeared in the door with a cup of black coffee. It had to be of an exactly specified strength and temperature or it ran the chance of being flung to the floor!

At seven o'clock accompanied by his secretary, Zirato, and one of the valets, Caruso left for the opera house. He allowed himself an hour to dress and to make up. I was always with him in his dressing room, but he received no other visitors before the performance. While he was making up he smoked one cigarette after another, for he never believed in the theory that smoking injures the voice. He smoked even in the hour before his appearance on the stage.

Just before he went on he inhaled a quantity of tepid salt water. Drawing in deep into his lungs, he expelled it before it strangled him. I always watched this performance with some anxiety. Another rite followed that was almost religiously carried out. His dresser and his valet stood on each side of him. One man handed him a tiny glass of whisky. As he finished it the other man gave him a small glass of sparkling water and this was immediately followed by a quarter of an apple. Caruso believed that this cleared his throat.

In each of his costumes, at the point where his hands fell, were two shallow pockets. In each pocket he carried a small vial of salt water. He had become expert in using this on the stage, unperceived by the audience.

CARUSO began his operatic career by acting as understudy for a tenor in a small company that toured the little country towns of Italy. One afternoon the company, with its scenery and baggage, arrived at a town in which, as it happened, lived several friends of Caruso's who had formerly been neighbors in Naples. As Caruso would be with them only for two nights, they wished to celebrate his arrival in true classic style. Enrico entered into the festivities with high spirits, and by the time the stars began to appear in the sky he was leading his companions in the songs they had sung together in the streets of Naples and drinking freely of the pleasant and potent vintage of that locality.

The noise and fun was at its height when the door burst open and one of his companions rushed in. "Caruso, come! Subito, subito! The tenor has been taken ill. You must sing."

Unfortunately Caruso did not remember the name of the opera in which he had to sing the leading role at such short notice, but it was one that he did not later include in his repertoire, one which is sung no longer; but he described with feeling the heat of the dressing room, the closeness of the wig on his aching dizzy head and the terrible difficulty he had in stooping down to put on his shoes. The audience realized his condition.

At the end of the performance Caruso was promptly dismissed from the company. He walked away from the darkened theatre, scowled at by his companions, who felt that he had disgraced them, laughed at and mocked by the little boys of the street, who ran after him shouting, "Ubbriaco! Ubbriaco!"—drunkard.

The next day he was sadly singing to himself, swimming his hands in the air as he rose to the notes and soared upon them. Ah, the song was so beautiful, so simple, so—— He broke off and listened—a trampling on the rickety stairs—someone bounding up, up, quickly, like a goat. Caruso sprang to his feet as the door burst open. "Caruso, come!" gasped the messenger. Caruso, asking no questions, leapt down the stairs and out into the street, paying no attention to the puffing messenger who tried to keep up with him. But a word here and there reached him: "They won't listen to the tenor! . . . They hissed him! . . . Call for you!"

AT some of the Italian restaurants out in the country Enrico tried to teach my sister Torrance and me to eat spaghetti. He would not allow us to cut up the long strips, but insisted that we should roll it about our forks and put the whole mass into our mouths. I can still see the tears in my sister's eyes as she tried to swallow, and I know I looked just as funny with the long ends of spaghetti hanging from my mouth to the plate.

ONE of Caruso's great friends was Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini. The first time I met that delightful singer she came in to see us one afternoon late, before a concert she was to give at the Hippodrome. Enrico jumped up from the table where we were pasting stamps and greeted her affectionately, kissing her on both cheeks. The poor lady was suffering from a cold and was worried about the condition of her voice for the evening's concert.

"Wait then!" cried Enrico. "I have a good spray. It will make your throat well. Come with me." He led her into his bathroom, and making her sit on the edge of the tub, he sprayed her throat carefully with a mixture of ether and iodoform. I can still see Madame Tetrazzini balancing on the rim of the tub, in full evening costume, with a short ermine cape about her shoulders, while Enrico, wearing his immense gold-rimmed spectacles, hung over her like an anxious owl. As he sprayed she had to pant quickly and not stop for a moment or the ether would have gone down into her lungs and anaesthetized her. This spray acted something like a varnish or a coat of shellac over the vocal cords. The results must have been beneficial, for according to the morning papers Madame Tetrazzini sang with her usual pure and beautiful voice.

CARUSO was always superstitious, and on his last visit to Italy he was certain that an evil fate was pursuing him. If he met a woman hunchback the only way to avoid the misfortune that would certainly follow the encounter was to keep on walking till he met a hunchbacked man. He never passed under a ladder or wore a new suit for the first time on a Friday. Neither would he depart or arrive on Friday. There is an old Neapolitan proverb that, freely translated, means "On Friday and Tuesday never start and never leave." In one of his letters while away on this trip he recounts a series of small accidents that had occurred mysteriously during three days, and adds gravely, "I am sure that Mr. R who came to interview me yesterday is a Jettatore"—(one who has an evil eye)—"because he say to me, 'I do not see how you keep so well and in such good condition for so long and in traveling so much.'"

The beginning of his mortal illness is foreshadowed in his allusion to starting his tour with a little cold. "I feel it in my chester"—(chest)—"and he will take a long time to go."

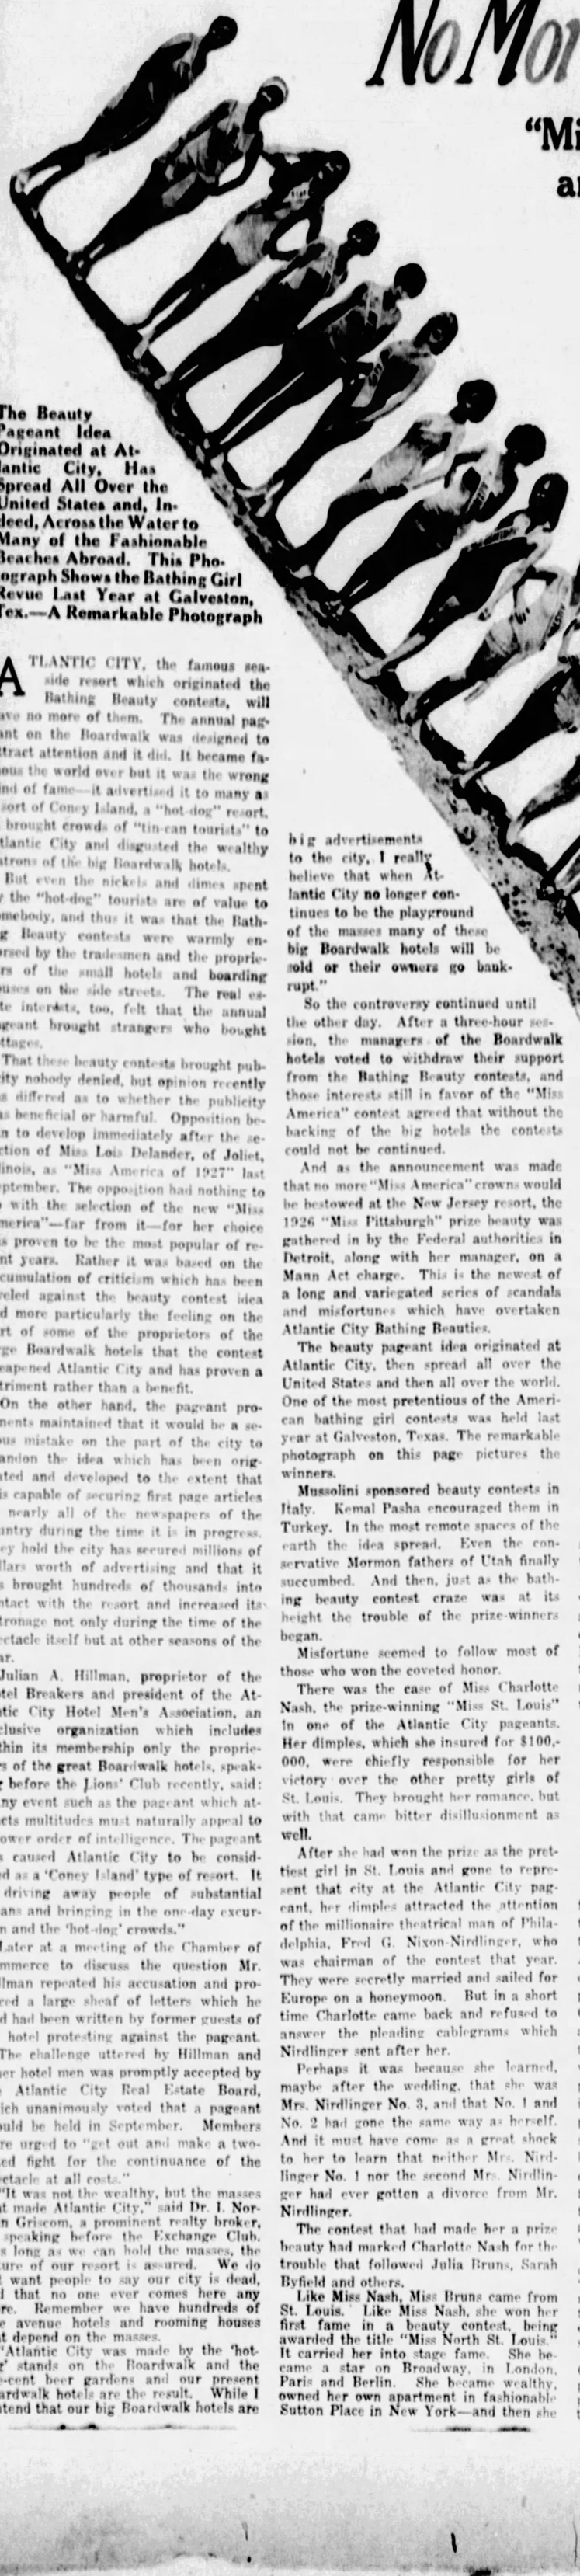
No More Bathing Beauty Contests at Atlantic City

"Miss America," Beautiful, but Often Disreputable, Brings an Undesirable Rabble to the Boardwalk, Gives It a "Coney Island Reputation," and the Various Scandals Have Hurt Business at the Big Hotels



The Beauty Pageant Idea Originated at Atlantic City, Has Spread All Over the United States and, Indeed, Across the Water to Many of the Fashionable Beaches Abroad. This Photograph Shows the Bathing Girl Revue Last Year at Galveston, Tex.—A Remarkable Photograph

ATLANTIC CITY, the famous seaside resort which originated the Bathing Beauty contests, will have no more of them. The annual pageant on the Boardwalk was designed to attract attention and it did. It became famous the world over but it was the wrong kind of fame—it advertised it to many as a sort of Coney Island, a "hot-dog" resort. It brought crowds of "tin-can tourists" to Atlantic City and disgusted the wealthy patrons of the big Boardwalk hotels.

But even the nickels and dimes spent by the "hot-dog" tourists are of value to somebody, and thus it was that the Bathing Beauty contests were warmly endorsed by the tradesmen and the proprietors of the small hotels and boarding houses on the side streets. The real estate interests, too, felt that the annual pageant brought strangers who bought cottages.

That these beauty contests brought publicity nobody denied, but opinion recently has differed as to whether the publicity was beneficial or harmful. Opposition began to develop immediately after the selection of Miss Lois Delander, of Joliet, Illinois, as "Miss America of 1927" last September. The opposition had nothing to do with the selection of the new "Miss America"—far from it—for her choice has proven to be the most popular of recent years. Rather it was based on the accumulation of criticism which has been leveled against the beauty contest idea and more particularly the feeling on the part of some of the proprietors of the large Boardwalk hotels that the contest cheapened Atlantic City and has proven a detriment rather than a benefit.

On the other hand, the pageant proponents maintained that it would be a serious mistake on the part of the city to abandon the idea which has been originated and developed to the extent that it is capable of securing first page articles on nearly all of the newspapers of the country during the time it is in progress. They hold the city has secured millions of dollars worth of advertising and that it has brought hundreds of thousands into contact with the resort and increased its patronage not only during the time of the spectacle itself but at other seasons of the year.

Julian A. Hillman, proprietor of the Hotel Breakers and president of the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association, an exclusive organization which includes within its membership only the proprietors of the great Boardwalk hotels, speaking before the Lions' Club recently, said: "Any event such as the pageant which attracts multitudes must naturally appeal to a lower order of intelligence. The pageant has caused Atlantic City to be considered as a 'Coney Island' type of resort. It is driving away people of substantial means and bringing in the one-day excursion and the 'hot-dog' crowds."

Later at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce to discuss the question Mr. Hillman repeated his accusation and produced a large sheaf of letters which he said had been written by former guests of his hotel protesting against the pageant.

The challenge uttered by Hillman and other hotel men was promptly accepted by the Atlantic City Real Estate Board, which unanimously voted that a pageant should be held in September. Members were urged to "get out and make a two-fisted fight for the continuance of the spectacle at all costs."

"It was not the wealthy, but the masses that made Atlantic City," said Dr. I. Norman Griscom, a prominent realty broker, in speaking before the Exchange Club. "As long as we can hold the masses, the future of our resort is assured. We do not want people to say our city is dead, and that no one ever comes here any more. Remember we have hundreds of side avenue hotels and rooming houses that depend on the masses.

"Atlantic City was made by the 'hot-dog' stands on the Boardwalk and the five-cent beer gardens and our present Boardwalk hotels are the result. While I contend that our big Boardwalk hotels are big advertisements to the city, I really believe that when Atlantic City no longer continues to be the playground of the masses many of these big Boardwalk hotels will be sold or their owners go bankrupt."

So the controversy continued until the other day. After a three-hour session, the managers of the Boardwalk hotels voted to withdraw their support from the Bathing Beauty contests, and those interests still in favor of the "Miss America" contest agreed that without the backing of the big hotels the contests could not be continued.

And as the announcement was made that no more "Miss America" crowns would be bestowed at the New Jersey resort, the 1926 "Miss Pittsburgh" prize beauty was gathered in by the Federal authorities in Detroit, along with her manager, on a Mann Act charge. This is the newest of a long and variegated series of scandals and misfortunes which have overtaken Atlantic City Bathing Beauties.

The beauty pageant idea originated at Atlantic City, then spread all over the United States and then all over the world. One of the most pretentious of the American bathing girl contests was held last year at Galveston, Texas. The remarkable photograph on this page pictures the winners.

Mussolini sponsored beauty contests in Italy. Kemal Pasha encouraged them in Turkey. In the most remote spaces of the earth the idea spread. Even the conservative Mormon fathers of Utah finally succumbed. And then, just as the bathing beauty contest craze was at its height the trouble of the prize-winners began.

Misfortune seemed to follow most of those who won the coveted honor.

There was the case of Miss Charlotte Nash, the prize-winning "Miss St. Louis" in one of the Atlantic City pageants. Her dimples, which she insured for $100,000, were chiefly responsible for her victory over the other pretty girls of St. Louis. They brought her romance, but with that came bitter disillusionment as well.

After she had won the prize as the prettiest girl in St. Louis and gone to represent that city at the Atlantic City pageant, her dimples attracted the attention of the millionaire theatrical man of Philadelphia, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, who was chairman of the contest that year. They were secretly married and sailed for Europe on a honeymoon. But in a short time Charlotte came back and refused to answer the pleading cablegrams which Nirdlinger sent after her.

Perhaps it was because she learned, maybe after the wedding, that she was Mrs. Nirdlinger No. 3, and that No. 1 and No. 2 had gone the same way as herself. And it must have come as a great shock to her to learn that neither Mrs. Nirdlinger No. 1 nor the second Mrs. Nirdlinger had ever gotten a divorce from Mr. Nirdlinger.

The contest that had made her a prize beauty had marked Charlotte Nash for the trouble that followed Julia Bruns, Sarah Byfield and others.

Like Miss Nash, Miss Bruns came from St. Louis. Like Miss Nash, she won her first fame in a beauty contest, being awarded the title "Miss North St. Louis." It carried her into stage fame. She became a star on Broadway, in London, Paris and Berlin. She became wealthy, owned her own apartment in fashionable Sutton Place in New York—and then she dropped out of things. For several years nothing was heard of the beautiful Miss Bruns.

Then she popped out in the news again, charged with the theft of $4,000 worth of jewels from a Mrs. Katherine Smith of Chicago. According to the police, she confessed she had taken the valuables in a moment of desperation, driven by need of money to get drugs. Her career ended recently in death by alcoholism.

A typical case of the ill fortune which seemed to haunt many of the winners was that of Sarah Gillespie, a pretty Southern girl. She married Claude Byfield, and was leading a happy married life when she decided to enter a beauty pageant contest in New York City. As a result of Mrs. Byfield's widely advertised beauty, the Byfields were lifted out of their commonplace but peaceful life. They began to mingle with the wealthy people of their home city, and soon became entangled in scandals, lawsuits and finally divorce.

After that came the case of Miss Elva Yvette Roy, "Miss Denver," who won the lost F. Lee Noffsinger, Denver theatre manager, who, like Nirdlinger in the romance of Miss Nash, turned out to be a married man who had neglected the formality of a divorce.

So pronounced was the bad luck that followed winners of the beauty contests that a number of girls who had entered took the pledge never to appear again. Among these was Miss Eunice Geiser, an extremely attractive 18-year-old telephone operator of Jersey City. Miss Geiser was picked to go to the pageant as "Miss Jersey City," and her misfortunes started immediately. Her pictures were, of course, printed in the newspapers. At once the telephone exchange in which she worked began to do an unprecedented business. It was, in fact, swamped with calls. It seemed that everybody under the sun was calling her up, either to congratulate her, or to ask her to parties, plural and singular. So the telephone company thought they would get along better without Miss Geiser than with her.

"I had a good job with the telephone company," said Miss Geiser at the time, "but that incessant flood of calls led to my dismissal. I didn't have enough money to go to Atlantic City. And so I've quit entering myself in any more such beauty shows."

Estelle Kosloff, the original "Miss Chicago of 1927," has also taken the pledge against entering any similar pageants again. She had to choose between that and her husband. Miss Kosloff was a "Miss" all right when she entered the contest as "Miss Chicago." She was given a $1,000 ring with the title, and the next day she was to go around to the stores and select a perfectly gorgeous outfit of street, afternoon and evening dresses, which the generous merchants had donated to the winner.

But just before she could start out on that wonderful tour, a rival dug up the fact that Estelle had married Earl McBath a week after she had entered the contest. And, as only single girls were eligible, that barred Estelle. Protesting vigorously, she gave up the ring and the beautiful clothes that she was to wear to Atlantic City to Miss Myrtle Valsted. Miss Valsted, by the way, was the energetic young woman who had uncovered Miss Kosloff's wedding.

All that disappointment would seem to have been enough hard luck, but there was more. So much attention had been diverted to Estelle, and pictures of herself in a minimum of clothing had been distributed so widely that young Mr. McBath grew unhappy. His unhappiness was communicated to his bride.

"Earl's been jealous of me ever since I won that beauty contest," she told her lawyer.

"He tried to get me to quit it when we were married, and I haven't had any peace since."

The lawyer wisely counselled the young people, and Estelle took the pledge never again to enter any beauty contest of any kind whatsoever.

Miss Marjorie Smith, who was "Miss Toronto" in one of the pageants, found a husband, but as a result of her publicity, her romance quickly ended in the divorce courts.

Then there was Dorothy Knapp, the "ideal model" of the well-known artist, Howard Chandler Christy. Dorothy was engaged to Mr. Christy's nephew. Just as soon as she was selected as the "American Venus" her romance went to smash.

Just why young Mr. Christy broke the engagement was never told, either by him or by Miss Knapp. The gossip was, however, that, like many other men who had married or were about to marry the prize beauties, he objected to the intense attention which became focused upon the lady of his heart.

These are only a few of the instances in which the beauty prize winners, seeking fame via the road of prettiness and publicity, found only unhappiness, divorce, disillusionment, and, in at least one case, death.

BOULEVARD AT MELWOOD — PHONE MAYFLOWER 2300

Mrs. Christine Woodside, the 34-Year-Old Kansas City Mother, Who Spanked Her Daughter Lorene and Was Ready to Go to Jail to Uphold Her Parental Authority.

4 Rules for Spanking Your Child

Mrs. Woodside, of Kansas City, Chastises Her Sixteen-Year-Old Daughter Lorene With a Clothes Hanger, Is Brought to Court, Sent to Jail, and at Once the Boys and Girls of Kansas Revolt, Threaten Ma and Pa With Arrest if They Dare Lay Hands on Them—So Judge Meade, of the Juvenile Court, Arises to Back Up Parental Authority With Official Rules for Home Spanking

Four Rules for Chastising Your Child.

By Judge Meade, of the Juvenile Court of Kansas.

1—Procuring a Paddle About 16 Inches Long and Rather Thin.
2—Adopt a Proper Frame of Mind, a Desire to Correct the Child Rather Than to Satisfy Your Own Anger.
3—Strike Only Four or Five Blows on the Proper Part of the Child's Anatomy.
4—Make It Plain What the Spanking Is For.

Sixteen-Year-Old Lorene, Who Was Severely Spanked by Her Mother With a Clothes Hanger, Went to Court With Her Complaint—And Later on Returned Home and Admitted That Her Mother Was Justified in Spanking Her.

MRS. Charles Woodside of Kansas City, Kansas, recently spanked her sixteen-year-old daughter Lorene and these spanks, like the shots at the battle of Lexington seem to have been heard around the world. Also they started a revolution of children against their parents.

Lorene, smarting from the whipping, which was thorough and applied with the maternal bare hand as well as with a coathanger, ran to Miss Inez MacKinnon, her Sunday School teacher and at that lady's advice, had her mother arrested. So great was the interest in the case that Municipal Judge Fred R. White transferred his court to the Kansas City Auditorium. But even that great hall did not begin to hold the mothers, fathers, teachers, welfare workers and boys and girls of spankable ages who crowded the streets outside.

The judge seemed in doubt as the case went on. Lorene had evidently been soundly whipped and it was not the first time. But Mrs. Woodside, proprietress of the St. Charles Hotel, was a hard-working mother who gave her full measure of everything including a $3,000 wardrobe, a motor car of her own and plenty of spending money, and when it came to spankings, she was equally open-handed. In fact the mother had to borrow one of her daughter's expensive gowns to appear properly dressed in court.

Lorene wept at the trial and wanted to call it off but her stern-faced advisers urged her on and the judge fined the mother $100. But Mrs. Woodside refused to pay nor would she let her husband, Lorene's stepfather do so nor raise bail, pending the appeal. Mrs. Woodside said:

"No, I did what was right. Everyone complains that boys and girls are going to the dogs because 'dancing mothers' neglect their training. I am not a dancing mother. I am a hard-working one and every cent I make I spend on that girl who has nothing to do but enjoy herself.

"But when Lorene goes out in her car she is going to behave as I tell her and come home when I say so. And if she defies me I am going to whip her hard enough to hurt. If it doesn't hurt it doesn't do any good.

"She will come back under those terms or she will not come back. I am not going to be responsible for her behavior if a court is going to back up a lot of meddling organizations who have encouraged the girl to defy me and who would be the first to blame me if she goes wrong. And I am going to jail in protest against an unjust decision."

So Mrs. Woodside went to jail to serve one day for every dollar of her fine and the welfare workers, the mother-teacher associations, etc., etc., told Lorene that she had done a fine and courageous thing. So did her high school friends. They called her "the woman of the hour—the great emancipatress."

Bodily chastisement is probably as old as the human race. In fact, until very recent years it was recognized as a handy and suitable method of curing delinquencies outside of the family circle.

The schoolmaster of former times always had his whip, rod or bundle of switches in conspicuous position on his desk and within easy reach. Servants, farm laborers and apprentices were flogged for idleness, disobedience or blunder, but even in past centuries it was recognized that personal chastisement must be kept within reasonable limits. And so it was that Elizabeth Brownrigg, according to "The Newgate Calendar," was executed in England in 1767 for flogging to death Mary Clifford, her servant.

As soon as Mrs. Woodside was locked up trouble began, both in and outside of the jail. The boys and girl of Kansas City held meetings made "patriotic speeches," passed resolutions and served notice on their astonished parents that the day of "mediaeval corporal punishment was past. Parental tyranny was overthrown; hereafter all children were free and equal with their parents. Before daring to raise a hair brush to their progeny, let fathers and mothers consider Mrs. Woodside, serving 100 days in jail while her daughter enjoyed the car and $3,000 wardrobe her prisoner-mother had given the girl."

Before surrendering entirely to this "bill of rights," fathers and mothers swamped Judge Henry Meade, of the Wyandotte Juvenile Court, with letters, wanting to know what to do about a son or daughter who stayed out all night and then told them to "go roll a hoop" or to "sit on a tack."

The judge could not answer them all, but he explained, through the newspapers, that the law did not mean to abolish spankings entirely, and that a parent might still spank a child, without going to prison for it, if the following rules were observed:

"Procure a paddle about sixteen inches long and rather thin.

"Adopt a proper frame of mind, a desire to correct the child rather than to satisfy your own anger.

"Strike only four or five blows on the proper part of the child's anatomy.

"Make it plain what the spanking is for."

The children hailed this learned opinion with shouts of joy. Under such humane conditions they would not mind being spanked every time they came home. Their interpretation raised so many questions that it seemed evident that parents would need to call in a lawyer and witnesses at spanking ceremonies in order to be on the safe side.

"What is a paddle?" was asked. The dictionary says: "An oar; specifically a sort of short oar having a blade or two (one at each end)."

That would have been all right, but the judicial ukase stated that it must be about 16 inches long. Nobody makes a short oar as short as that. And what did "rather thin" mean?

The parents thought that a paddle-shaped spanking implement, only sixteen inches long would have to be from three-quarters of an inch to an inch thick to be at all effective. The youths and maidens of Kansas City held that this would be rather thick. They cautioned their parents that they would not be a party to breaking the law by allowing themselves to be spanked with anything thicker than a shingle. There would be legal proceedings if they were assaulted with a heavier paddle.

"Mother, how will I be sure that you are in what the judge calls a proper frame of mind for spanking me?" asked a flapper. "I think you should call in a jury of my peers, twelve of my disinterested boy and girl friends, to determine your mental attitude. And should it be a prayerful frame of mind or an affectionate one? Will you begin the ritual by getting down on your knees or by kissing me? I think the least you could do would be to shake hands with me, like the prizefighters, before the first blow."

What is the "proper part of the child's anatomy" on which the four or five blows must be planted unless the parent wishes to be penalized for foul blows?

"That is the one thing that makes sense," said an exasperated parent. "Through the ages there has been one classical area to which spankings have been applied."

"That idea is all out of date," replied his high-school son. "They may have turned you up and spanked you, but in schools today they hit you on the palm of the hand, and not many teachers dare do even that. Read Freud and you'll see that such a humiliating posture might cause an inferiority complex. Four or five times on the palm with a shingle is all the judge allows. You wouldn't want to disgrace us by going to jail."

The fourth and last clause, even the children considered foolish, and they voted to waive it. No child complains that its parents don't tell it what it is they disapprove in its behavior, but rather that they tell it too often. The flappers and jelly-beans thought the judge would have done better to have limited parents to just one criticism and told them to make it brief.

Anyhow, this bars out the hair-brush and the maternal slipper which parents of past generations used for educational purposes without suspecting that they were cruel and wicked. Of course, the willow switch, the stove poker, the dog whip and even so light and flimsy a thing as a coat hanger are forbidden by this judicial decision and opinion which overrules the biblical injunction:

"He that spareth his rod hateth his son."

One Kansas City father announced that his own hand would do for a paddle and that if five applications did not bring results he would try five more and keep on until he made an impression. His son served notice on him that while his hand might look like a paddle it was not a proper one because it was not "rather thin." If he used that or if he used any other more than five times he would call a policeman.

Children in these athletic days are often bigger and stronger than their parents. In that case would the judge permit calling in assistance, such as the cook or chauffeur, or, if there were not servants, was it the policeman's duty to act as assistant spanker? The children magnanimously waived this question also. As long as the spankings were done according to the judge's prescription they would not resist or object. Why should they? It was not as if the thing were a serious matter like having to wash the dishes or going on an errand.

Mrs. Woodside was determined to serve out her 100 days, but she proved such an embarrassing prisoner that they put her out after only three days. Instead of sending out for heroin or cocaine, as convicts are supposed to, she called for soap and a scrubbing brush, sent home for her working smock and scrubbed her cell till it was clean. Then she insisted on tackling the corridor and neighboring cells, "so they won't smell so." Mrs. Woodside could not see why a jail shouldn't be just as clean as a hotel, and she got the other "guests" to complaining about the filth. The papers printed her comments and the matter became most annoying.

"We are not trying to compete with first-class hotels down here. What does she think this place is?" protested the jailors, and finally somebody induced Mrs. Woodside's husband, against her orders, to put up a $250 bond, pending the appeal of the case, and then, against her wishes, she was put out of that jail.

Just seven days later the great revolution that was to free children from parental bondage received a staggering blow. Its patron saint and heroine, Lorene, went over to the enemy. She left Miss MacKinnon, with whom she had been living, and all her other advisers flat and without warning appeared at her mother's door. As the mother and daughter looked at each other tears came to both.

"Mother," the girl sobbed, "I want to come back to you."

"Now you realize your mistake you are back,' said Mrs. Woodside with a flash of sternness which quickly melted as she folded the non-spankable daughter in her arms. Lorene, however, was no longer that way. She came back on her mother's terms and made a public statement that she was wrong and wanted everyone to know it. She said:

"The commandment, 'Honor thy father and thy mother' has been forcibly brought home to me in my week of suffering. Advice and counsel in the face of my love for her counted for nothing. It was all a terrible mistake. My mother is dearer to me than all the world, I have been guilty of a grave sin.

"When I swore out that warrant against my mother I did not know what I was doing. I was given to understand that I was obtaining some sort of a peace bond for protection of persons who thought they were befriending me.

"My return is not conditional. I return as I left, willing to take punishment whenever my mother thinks it necessary. I have been spanked again, as mother promised she would whenever I returned. I asked mother to; I felt I deserved it."

The mother was delighted to get her daughter back.

"Maybe this will be a lesson to other mothers' daughters," she said, happily, and then, as an angry afterthought, added: "And also to certain meddlers who have nothing better to do with their time and money than turn a daughter against her mother."

It looks as if the "meddlers" would lose. Mrs. Woodside seems to have completely triumphed. She has recovered her daughter and refused to pay a fine or accept a parole, the jail does not want her and when her case comes up on appeal before the Wyandotte District Court, the main prosecuting witness will be on her side.

Parents, too, are perking up. One well-known citizen told his son that if he didn't behave he would take him out to the garage and give him a good, old-fashioned licking "such as father used to make," with a strap, not a paddle, whether he went to jail for it or not. And the boy behaved. The great revolution has been postponed.

The Story of a Man Who Married His Wife's Slayer to Save His Son

With a Choked Cry Cora Fell Upon the Floor at the Vicar's Feet and Clutched His Knees.

She stood still. She pressed the back of her hand against her lips, determined not to cry out again. Another figure stopped before her.

"Lost?"

It was the voice of a stranger and she drew a deep breath of relief.

"I am," she acknowledged. The stranger flashed a light upon her and said familiarly:

"Haven't we met before?"

She moved away hastily and reached the porch of the church.

"If I get through today I'll be all right, for a year, anyway," she said, half aloud. "Rather a good idea to hide in a church! He's not likely to come looking here."

Passing through a heavy baize door she entered the church.

She paused in involuntary admiration. Her gaze traveled to the roof from which fell glittering chains, each ending in a separate diadem of light. Her eyes dropped to the richly-colored walls where pictures and pieces of old, rare tapestry were stretched into frames even older and rarer. The scent of flowers mingled with the warmth and intense peace of the place.

A handful of people knelt close to the pulpit. She found that a faint mist blurred her vision of them and realized that the fog, even in here, made clear sight difficult.

The woman smiled as though the idea of a service aroused her scorn. She went up to the foot of the pulpit to examine a strip of embroidery in silver and gold thread on a background of the heaviest satin she had ever seen. Then she dropped upon the nearest chair and relaxed with a sigh. She had not realized that she was so tired.

"November the fourteenth," ran her weary thought. "If I get through today I'm safe for a year. And a lot can happen in a year."

Outside, the old taxi driver wrestled with his engine. A shout caused him to straighten up. A policeman was running cautiously in the direction of the shout, and the taxi driver joined him. Just beyond the first corner loomed a group of people all looking at something on the ground. The policeman pushed through and knelt beside a man lying almost under the wheels of a big dark car.

"Anybody know him?" asked the policeman. To the taxi driver who was pressing forward he yelled: "Keep back there, unless you know the man."

"I thought it might be a nurse that I drove just now," apologized the taxi driver. "She'd lorst 'erself—"

"A nurse in gray?" asked an old lady at his shoulder. Through a dark veil eyes of a curiously pale color glittered at him.

"Yes, mum." And he gave her all the information he could.

As he finished the old lady stared down into the face of the injured man.

Evidently she recognized him. She addressed the policeman. "Officer, I know this man. He is a Mr. Mattanos. I don't know his address—but I met him some time ago in Cairo. I will be responsible for him. Here is my card."

The policeman took the card.

"Will you wait for the ambulance, madam?" he asked.

"No. The seats in my car can be arranged to lay him at full length on them. If you will help my chauffeur to lift him in—"

The taxi driver was about to offer his help when he felt the old lady touch his arm.

"That nurse you spoke of," she said in a low voice. "If you should see her again tell her about this accident and that I took him away to my house to recover." She put a new pound note into his hand.

"I wouldn't know her again," objected the taxi driver. "And who shall I say took him away, mum?"

"The nurse's name is Miss Cora Brierly. If you describe me and my car, she will know who I am. I met her in Cairo, on the day her patient died. That was November the fourteenth, exactly a year ago. Tell her that—she will remember."

"I'll do wot I can, mum," he said aloud, "but in a fog like this——"

The old lady stepped into the car and, as soon as Mattanos had been comfortably disposed, shut the door. A minute later the big car was crawling away.

CHAPTER II.

IT WAS the Reverend Hugh Dale, vicar of St. Seiriol's, with whom the nurse had collided. It was Dale's fault. He had stopped to smile up at the flaming figure of the saint; and her startled cry had brought him back to earth.

He groped his way to the gate of the vicarage. At the sound of his latchkey from the depths of the finely furnished hall a young girl darted forward, her face flushed.

"Oh, Uncle Hugh!" she exclaimed. "I was worried. I rang up the Settlement and found you had left more than two hours ago. You look exhausted."

She led him into his study, pulled his chair up to the fire and rang for tea.

As Aileen Southcombe moved round the delightful room she remembered anew that Hugh Dale—since her father's death her beloved guardian—had married an heiress, Lady Mary Dale, whose fortune had amounted to some 60,000 pounds.

It had been an unusual match—the wealthy, beautiful daughter of the Earl of Kingelere and the unpretentious young clergyman of an East End parish. Her eyes filled with tears. "Oh, if only Aunt Mary hadn't died! It's a year ago today."

The vicar raised his eyes to where, above the mantelpiece, the portrait of his adored wife hung. Aileen looked sadly from the picture back to his upraised face.

The spell of silence was broken with the arrival of the tea wagon. Aileen's thoughts left the dear dead woman and the even dearer living man and fled to their son, Gordon, and his letter, which lay against her heart. Gordon Dale was a rising young lawyer, practicing in Egypt, and to Aileen the most wonderful person in the world.

"A terrible fog!" said Dale as Aileen began to dispense tea and muffins. "The postman will be late, but I feel quite certain that there will be a letter from Gordon tonight."

"Uncle Hugh, I've a letter from Gordon."

Dale's worn face glowed suddenly.

"He's coming home?"

"Tomorrow afternoon," said Aileen; "he'll come straight here."

"Splendid! I shall have to be out until about half-past five, so you must entertain him till then."

The vicar smiled indulgently at his ward. In his opinion, Gordon's happiness lay in her keeping.

"Aileen mavourneen. It's all over except the shouting and we're doing that at dinner tonight. I expect to arrive in time for tea tomorrow. I shall arrive at Victoria about three-thirty. Don't come to meet me, but contrive to be at home alone. I have something very special to tell you. Yours, ever, Gordon."

"He sounds as if he cared," Aileen told herself. "But he has never said anything definite."

"I haven't seen Gordon since the funeral," said the vicar quietly.

Aileen started. It was the first time during the year since his wife's death that he had referred to it.

"This afternoon," said the vicar, "I was called to see old Mrs. Harper. She is dying, Aileen, and wished to confess to me. The sin that weighed upon her was nearly thirty years old, but I shall never forget the peace that came to her face when all was told. For the first time in the year a whisper of consolation came to me also . . . On my way home a curious thing happened. Beside a lamppost that strange old woman, Countess Xanti, was standing motionless, staring down toward the river. I saw indescribable suffering in those pale, bright eyes of hers. She recognized me, half turned towards me—then drew back and there was something about her that made it impossible for me to approach her. But it set me thinking. I have always assumed that confession is easy once the desire to confess is present. But there may be hearts that long for that relief and are held back by fears . . . Tonight, at the service, I shall try to overcome those fears of rich and poor alike."

"Don't drive yourself so hard, dear Uncle Hugh," she whispered. "You will break down."

Dale shook his head.

"The work at the Settlement helps me to forget the bitterness of losing—her. She built it; I contributed only my services."

Aileen moved away from him; tears were on her face.

"If only Aunt Mary hadn't gone out to Cairo!" she murmured. "Or if I'd gone with her——"

"Neither the journey nor the excitement of seeing Gordon again was enough to cause her death," returned Dale heavily. "I saw Sir Edgar Lotman a month or so ago. He told me that her collapse was a physiological accident and a profound surprise to him."

"I remember when Aunt Mary was taken ill he cabled to you that there was no need for you to go to Cairo."

"He told me, moreover, that he insisted on Gordon's signing the cable with him because he was so afraid that I should be unduly anxious about her." Dale's voice shook. "And ten days later she died—and I was not with her——"

The muffled clang of the bell for evensong sounded. He got up and went through the passage between the vicarage and the vestry of St. Seiriol's.

At the week-day services at St. Seiriol's, Dale generally spoke from notes, but tonight he decided to speak simply of what was in his heart. From the pulpit he glanced searchingly at the small congregation in his line of vision.

His eye came to rest at last upon a woman immediately below him. She wore the gray uniform of a hospital nurse and his quick eye noted that her attitude, as she lounged in her chair, was one of indifference to the service. She had crossed her knees and was swinging a gray shod foot and restless hands, and as a result his opening phrases were halting.

A late comer took his place behind the nurse. At the sound of the chair scraping upon the tiled floor of the church she half rose, swung round and then sank back into her place with her hand over her mouth. It was evident that she had been badly startled and Dale seized the opportunity while she was recovering herself to launch out into his full appeal.

"Fear comes to us in many guises. Some fear illness or poverty; some are utterly crushed"—his voice trembled—"by the loss of those we love." He leaned forward earnestly.

"Most of us fear the moment of death. In the gradual, relentless parting with life there is terror because there is loneliness."

They include the lowest handling and financing charges available.

Since its announcement on January first, the Bigger and Better Chevrolet has been awarded a public endorsement of most spectacular proportions!

Nine million people crowded dealers' salesrooms the first three days following its presentation! Thousands of retail deliveries have been made every day since! A quarter million of these new cars are now on the road! Never in history has any new Chevrolet model been so enthusiastically received——for never has a new model represented such a startling revelation in beauty, performance and quality at such amazing low prices.

And if you see and drive this great new car you can quickly sense why its tremendous popularity is increasing every day.

The new Chevrolet is smoother and more powerful—because its improved valve-in-head motor now incorporates such engineering advancements as alloy "invar strut" constant clearance pistons, hydro-laminated crankshaft gears and mushroom type valve tappets.

It is more beautiful—the marvelously beautiful Fisher bodies display a new achievement by the world's most famous body builders... with hood and body lines gracefully streaming back in an unbroken sweep from the higher, flat-cap radiator. All models are finished in modish shades of genuine Duco.

It is easier to drive—because the worm and gear steering mechanism is fitted with ball bearings throughout, even at the front axle knuckles.

It is infinitely more comfortable—because the 107" wheelbase permits better weight distribution, while road shocks are counteracted by semi-elliptic shock absorber springs 84% as long as the wheelbase and set parallel to the frame.

And it sells at new low prices—because the economies resulting from tremendous volume production, which last year made Chevrolet the world's largest builder of automobiles, have made possible amazing price reductions.

Come in today! Let us give you a demonstration of this sensational new automobile. Learn for yourself why it is being everywhere hailed as the world's most luxurious low-priced automobile!

Seals of Silence

By Roy Vickers

He paused. His gaze swept his scattered listeners and rested upon the nurse.

Her eyes were fixed upon his. They seemed like the eyes of the dying woman in the slums who had that afternoon confessed to him a thirty-year-old crime.

"In that loneliness," he continued, still looking intently down upon her, "whether it be through approaching death of the body or of the soul, the soul is forced to commune with itself; and from that saint and sinner alike may well shrink. For the spark of God that burns in all of us says to the soul—'Thus and thus have I commanded thee. How hast thou done?'"

The nurse's white hands made a spasmodic movement and then were tightly clenched in her lap.

"I have spoken of the approaching death of the soul. In one sense the soul can never die, but when we commit a crime and are unrepentant—we condemn our souls to death, and then we know loneliness. The presence of a friend brings no comfort, and yet—there may be a gleam of comfort in that friend's intention to help. Tonight I have come to see that I have been too ready to offer help in bereavement, sickness and poverty; too slow to tender it when only spiritual solitude had to be faced."

His voice shook with emotion and he had to steady it.

"If any of you are driven by fear—I am here to take the burden from you. To God you must confess your sin and of Him ask forgiveness. But should you wish another to pray with you for forgiveness, and if you feel you cannot unaided make your peace, come to me and unburden yourself and let us pray together. Come with honesty of purpose and with penitence. If your sin is of such a nature that you dare tell it to no man lest he betray you, remember this—there is a higher law than man's which every priest of whatever faith will obey.

"If an enemy came to me as a priest and confessed he had done something for which men would punish him, I would rather spend the rest of my life in prison than by look, word or deed betray his confidence."

He pronounced the benediction and went slowly to the altar.

When he left the chancel he knew that his congregation would leave all but the nurse. Of that he was utterly convinced.

He disrobed and sent word to the verger that should anyone wish to speak to him he would be in the vestry.

When he entered the vestry she was there. At the sound of the opening door she turned quickly and gasped.

"Oh! You startled me! I thought—"

"I'm afraid I have kept you waiting, but I wished our conversation to be undisturbed. . . . Please sit down."

She sat down almost unwillingly.

"I asked to see you, but I don't suppose you meant to be taken at your word."

"If you refer to my address just now," said Dale, "I certainly did mean to be."

"But I'm not even a churchwoman. I attend a service if a patient dies, but only because it looks well," and she gave a wild laugh.

Dale saw she was beautiful. Her eyes were brown with golden flecks and long lashes, her skin was flawless; her hair was brown like her eyes, and her lips were full and red.

Under his scrutiny her brows drew together and her mouth took on a sullen droop.

"I don't want to be preached at. What's done is done, and I'm not pretending I am sorry. Neither am I particularly afraid of hell." She looked at him defiantly.

"Then what," asked Dale sternly, "is it that you are so very afraid of?"

She sagged in her chair as though he had dealt her a blow.

"Come!" Dale urged. "Let me help you. I should judge that you had done a wrong and were afraid of someone's vengeance. Am I not right?"

"Yes, you're right! It's wonderful you should have guessed. I'm going to confess to you what I have never whispered to a living soul. I've never met anyone like you——"

"It is you that we wish to discuss and not me," Dale pointed out coldly. "If I can be of service to you, please tell me, as briefly as possible, in what way."

Her eyes hardened and her hands gripped the arms of her chair.

"Very well," she retorted, "you shall have it briefly. It's death I'm afraid of—the watching for the knife to fall. It will get me in the end. That's what made me hide in the church. That's what made me feel the awful loneliness you talked about. I thought I could stick it out by myself, but I can't. I must tell someone about it."

Countess Xanti Fastened Her Gaze Upon the Closed Eyelids of the Greek. "Paul Mattanos! Come Back!"

Her eyes clung to Dale's like those of a trapped animal.

"I'm not penitent," she insisted. "It's just being alone—hounded—this fog has got on my nerves. It drove me to talk to you."

"You say you are not penitent. Have you done something of which another woman might well repent?"

"I suppose you would think so. I killed someone."

With great effort Dale controlled himself.

"You killed someone—and not by accident?"

"It was no accident! I deliberately gave a woman patient a fatal dose."

CHAPTER III.

DALE fought down his revulsion—the feeling that he had touched pitch and become defiled.

"Do you care to tell me more?" he asked at last in a low tone.

"I believe I'm a fool to have told you anything!" she exclaimed suspiciously. "If I get through today safely I shall be all right for a bit—or I should have been if I hadn't told you what I have."

"Are you insinuating that I might betray a confidence made under the seal of the confessional?" flashed Dale. "From a priest, prison or torment is powerless to draw such a secret."

"I didn't mean to offend you." She was cowed by his vehemence. "It's like this. The man who wants to kill me is a Greek. We quarreled and he threatened that on exactly the same date he would find me and stab me. It's a year ago today and this afternoon I saw him in Kensington. I got into a taxi and he followed in another. Then the fog came down and that may save me—for a year at least. He may only mean to frighten me today and for years to come, but he's a devil; in his own time, he'll strike." She shivered and drew her hands over her face.

"I've told you," she concluded, almost in a whisper. "I committed murder as surely as if I had shot her with a revolver. I suppose I had better tell you why——"

Dale interrupted: "I should like you to realize that I can do nothing to save you from the material consequences of your act."

"There won't be any so long as you keep my secret. They could never prove anything. . . . Twelve years ago, when I was training, there was a student who was really bad. He was a Greek. They wouldn't let him qualify as a doctor. That meant he had to live by

WHEN William Wirt Winchester, son of Hon. Oliver Fisher Winchester, the "rifle king," died 40 years ago, he left twenty million dollars to his young widow and no responsibilities. All she had to do was enjoy life, and yet she couldn't because of just one thing—fear of the spirits of the dead.

The agony of the rich woman's terror was revealed when she herself died, recently, and for the first time the secrets of her huge house near San Francisco began to be explored. It had to be literally explored and a map made and even six weeks were required to move the furniture out because the moving men got lost in that uncanny labyrinth "where downstairs leads neither to the cellar nor upstairs to the roof."

In all the thirty-eight years the widow and her secretary lived there alone, except for the servants, workmen's hammers never ceased. It een-room house when she bought it, but as soon as she moved in it began to grow in all directions, till now, from an aeroplane it looks as if some giant had played a game of dominoes.

The strange growth spread until it reached a distant barn, flowed around and adhered to it like a tumor, and finally engulfed it. An observation tower shot up, only to be choked by later structures, until nothing could be seen from it and this weird building was even stranger inside than out. But there was a method in all this seeming madness.

Her concern about ghostly visitors first came to Sarah Pardee Winchester as she watched her husband slowly dying of tuberculosis in Hartford, Conn., and the idea grew in her mind. Seeing how this man hated to die a peaceful and natural death, she began to wonder about that great fortune that would soon be hers and which she knew had been accumulated by the manufacture of firearms. During two generations of Winchesters, thousands, perhaps millions of people had been killed by those weapons.

What became of the spirits of all these dead men and women? Were they hovering somewhere, blaming and cursing the makers of the "repeaters" that had slain them? At first she feared only for what would happen to her husband when he became a ghost himself and had to face them. Then came the dread that their vengeance might follow the fortune itself and haunt her.

Sarah Winchester was never a church woman. So after the funeral she went to Boston and consulted a spiritualistic medium who confirmed the rich widow's first fears. Yes, indeed, all the spirits of men, women and even some of the animals that had been killed by those rifles were haunting the fortune and would haunt her. There were many seances and she received much advice. The worst haunters would be Indians.

It appeared that there were both good and evil spirits and that only the bad ones were to be dreaded. If she could make her surroundings congenial to the better class ghosts, they would keep the others away. This seemed reasonable to the widow, because in this world she knew that nice people keep hoodlums out of restricted neighborhoods where they live. But how was she to attract the nicer sort of spooks? The spiritualists said it was to be done by getting a large house and fixing it up according to the wishes of the spirits which would be revealed to her.

Mrs. Winchester seems to have had full belief in the messages from the spirit world, but for some reason to have lost confidence in the mediums themselves. She left them all abruptly, crossed the continent to San Francisco and on the Los Gatos Road, some distance out and not far from Cupertino, bought the eighteen-room house that was to grow into a 148-room ghost barracks.

The widow's first move was to hire twenty-two carpenters, who commenced building an ell. On their heels arrived landscape gardeners, who planted a towering hedge, shutting off all view of the premises from the road. Seven Japanese gardeners were employed till the day of her death, keeping that hedge so no one could see through it. The carpenters and other workmen never saw their employer, nor did the servants, except rarely, as a veiled figure flitting like a ghost herself. Only one, the Chinese butler, was permitted to see her face as he served the meals on the Winchester $30,000 gold dinner service.

Orders for the servants and workmen and all contracts with the outside world came through Miss Margaret Merriam, niece, secretary and finally heiress, in part, of such of the fortune as was not spent in humoring Mrs. Winchester's visitors from beyond the grave. Those first orders to the carpenters were rather vague and impractical, as might be expected from a woman who was not an architect. But by degrees they improved until the boss carpenter was able to work from the plans without making very many changes.

This may have been because the widow was studying books and magazines on building or because she was getting in closer touch with what the better sort of spirits wanted. She was holding her own seances now without benefit of any mediums. Her method was simply to go into her seance room and sit there until the spirits put ideas in her head, which she put on paper and the secretary put into effect.

There seemed to be no hurry about any of this work and yet the artisans wondered why it had to go on Sundays, holidays and even Christmas Day. The puzzled workers had no way of knowing that the Boston spiritualists had promised Mrs. Winchester that the good ghosts would keep the bad ghosts away and never let anything unpleasant happen to her as long as hammers rang night and day and every day of the year in her efforts to please them.

The house merely happened to have 148 rooms at the time death stopped Mrs. Winchester's building activities, but it is known that at least five times as many chambers, large and small, had been built, only to be torn out again. This was not entirely because the spirits were hard to please; there was a sort of ghost war going on all the time, and besides that the sound of the hammers must never cease.

If Mrs. Winchester's aim had simply been to have a ghost-proof home, the problem would have been comparatively simple. All the traditional spirit-alarms, ghost traps and scare-spooks that the mind of man has ever invented to protect himself from spectral invaders might have been installed in the original house without any vast expense.

For instance, one of the oldest beliefs is that ghosts hate mirrors, and if one catches sight of its own reflection will instantly vanish. All Sarah Winchester need have done, therefore, was to have built a cheval glass in all four sides of each room to make the entire premises spiritually uninhabitable.

But that would not do at all. It would have freed the place of the spooks of Indians, low grade white men, fire and water "elementals" and other undesirables, but it would also offend the respectable citizens of the spiritual world with whom she hoped to associate when her own time came. So, instead of hundreds of mirrors, in all those 148 rooms there are only two, less than one would find in the average small apartment.

These two were put, one in Mrs. Winchester's bedroom and the other in her adjoining bathroom. Even the most sensitive ghost would admit that his hostess had a right to privacy in those places. Apparently the secretary and the servants had to use hand mirrors or go without.

Another thing that even the most spiritually ignorant would omit from a ghost-proof house would be fireplace chimneys. If ghost stories are to be believed at all, spooks dearly love to vanish up the chimney, and often to enter that way. Mrs. Winchester provided them not with one, but fifty of these popular spook escapes, so that when the clock tolled the hour for them to return to wherever it is they came from there was no need of undignified jostling and bumping of elbows. It is doubtful if ever in the haunted castles of Europe ghosts could get such service. She had a fireplace even in her sun porch in case a wandering wraith happened to be caught there at the moment of departure.

In reading ghost lore, or perhaps from the spirits themselves, the widow learned how important this element of time is to those who drop in from the other world. They usually appear at the stroke of 12, and it is a most unconventional ghost that would show up before midnight or 1 o'clock, and leave at 2 a. m. at the latest. Spooks, however, do not carry wrist watches and have to rely on mortal timepieces. They have a pathetic trust in "the clock in th steeple," which sometimes is not justified.

Like the considerate hostess that she was, Mr Winchester built a bell tower, housing a huge bel but with no way of getting to it except by climbi over the roofs and placing ladders. The inside o the tower was a smooth, unscalable well, down th center of which hung the bell rope to the cell Through an underground labyrinth, known only t one Japanese servant and his understudy, the end o the rope could be reached.

The Japanese bell ringer carried an expensiv watch and in his room were three of the best chron meters that money could buy. Every day he tel phoned to an astronomical observatory and check the correctness of his chronometers, from which, i turn, he set his watch. The countryside could neve understand why the Winchester bell always boome the hour of midnight, of 1 A. M. and 2 A. M. b was silent the rest of the 24. That is all that a properly behaved ghost needs to know about time.

These features and the furnishings and finish o the rooms, worthy of any royal palace, were frank to please the nicer sort of spirits with whom sh wished to take her rightful position as a wealth society woman when she moved on to the next worl Millions of dollars were spent in this way, b millions more on what would seem sheer insanity i one did not make allowance for the woman's oth motive—to keep out low and degraded spirits.

This would be hard in any case, but particular so in hers, on account of ghosts of no-good India with whom she was especially afflicted. Everyon who has read about seances has noticed that the mo common of "spirit controls" are Indians. Everybod from Chief Sitting Bull down, turns up to tal through the medium.

Unfortunately for Mrs. Winchester, many tho sands of redskins have "bitten the dust" from rifle and ammunition bearing her name and apparentl every one of these victims was bent on haunting he for it. Next to an "incubus" or one of the "elemen tals," an Indian rates as about the meanest spoo

there is. Anyone can imagine how hard it would be to run a club for members of the "four hundred," if a lot of dirty blanket Indians kept intruding. It is a wonder that Mrs. Winchester was able to manage at all. It must have been that the good ghosts had made a promise through that Boston medium and felt honor bound to keep it as long as the widow kept those hammers pounding.

Most important of all was to keep these spiritual nuisances out of the seance room where she held her conferences with the decent ghosts. Until her death no living foot but hers stepped into that small bare chamber whose walls are painted blue and the varnish of whose floor is worn in spots by the daily tread of only her slippers. It contained a cabinet, an arm chair, a table, paper and pencil (probably for "automatic writing") and a planchette board. The interior was ordinary enough, but the entrance, exit and means of seeing out were extraordinary.

When Mrs. Winchester set out for her seance room it might well have discouraged the ghost of the redman or even of a bloodhound to follow her. After traversing an interminable labyrinth of rooms and hallways, suddenly she would push a button, a panel would fly back and she would step quickly from one apartment into another, and unless the pursuing ghost was watchful and quick, he would lose her. Then she opened a window in that apartment and climbed out, not into the open air, but onto the top of a flight of steps that took her down one story only to meet another flight that brought her right back to the same level again, all inside the house. This was supposed to be very disconcerting to evil spirits who are said to be naturally suspicious of traps.

There was a maze of these stairs and Mrs. Winchester on these tours faithfully placed her foot on every step of them, whether they led anywhere or not. One stairway consists of seven flights, with forty-four steps, enough to take one to the top of a high house. But climbing all these seven flights elevated Mrs. Winchester only about seven feet, because each step was just two inches high and a foot and a half across.

The theory was that such unheard of stairs confused and worried the soul of the simple redskin. Evidently she thought they were effective or they would have been torn out like many other schemes of the good spirits that did not work as well.

After the balconies came a great room full of all sorts and sizes of balconies. Here the bewildered spirit might run hastily around a corner to find that the balcony had suddenly shrunk in width from three feet to only as many inches. You can step from one of these balconies through a window and find yourself back on another part of the same balcony. From still another you can step through a door that once closed cannot be opened again from the inside, forcing you to find some other means of escape.

There are many of these one-way doors in that curious house. Finally after perhaps half an hour of such twisting and turning, confident that she had thrown the last ghostly pursuer off the track, Mrs. Winchester came to a clothes press in a bedroom of one of the many apartments. The drawers at the bottom of the press are dummies. So also is one of the doors, but the other leads not into a closet, but into the seance room. This, too, is a one-way door and the only exit is through a narrow one with a bar across it, a foot and a half high, which for ghostly reasons had to be stepped over.

There had to be something to prevent some sly spook from waiting outside the door and slipping in as Mrs. Winchester stepped out. Any spirit who tried it would bark his shins on that unexpected bar and before he had time to recover from his surprise she had time to close the door.

Why these elaborate precautions and deceptions did not confuse good spirits as well as bad, is a secret that the widow carefully preserved. The ancient notion about spirits of evil was that they were always lame and it would take pretty good feet to cover that tortuous path. But modern spiritualists, who supposedly know more than the ancients, don't seem to think the feet of ghosts are particularly important. More likely, if the house is ever torn down, there will be found some secret spook entrance to the seance room for her invited guests.

There are no windows in the seance room, but many shafts and light-wells running at various angles to the servants' quarters and the main kitchen over which the seance room rests like a conning tower. Some of these shafts are only a few inches in diameter, others are wide enough for the passage of a man s body. The big ones contained cross bars which were probably to prevent spooks rather than live people from crawling up.

From the sun porch, the one mentioned before as having a fireplace, there run more of these peep-wells. In its floor is a skylight of plate glass with a railing around it. Looking down this skylight you see nothing but the polished floor of the room beneath. This is not only an observatory for watching the servants, but its windows give a sweep of the Santa Clara Valley. One pane is of optical glass in the form of a lens, and if you stand at a certain spot on the porch it acts as a telescope, magnifying the scenery.

Though her house contained more steps than the Tower of Babel, the widow was no lover of stairs, as shown by the fact that she had five elevators, the cheapest of which cost $10,000, and only lifted her ten feet from the ground floor to her bedroom.

Another jealously guarded place was her closet room. This spacious chamber is filled with closets, lockers and bins of all sorts from floor to ceiling. After Sarah's death, a fortune in the most expensive fabrics, from all parts of the world, was found there. Precious laces, great bolts of silk and satin and a whole van load of the loveliest linen were taken out. Some of this treasure had lain there more than thirty years, and must have been ordered for the spirits to gloat over, because the owner of the house never made any attempt to use any of it.

As the endless work of building and rebuilding went on the various artisans were hired and fired, and as far as possible kept from knowing what their fellow workers were doing, but they could not fail to notice that everywhere the number thirteen was in evidence. Most of the windows had thirteen panes, the walls thirteen panels, the chandeliers had thirteen globes, there were thirteen steps to most flights of stairs, thirteen squares of wood wherever you looked on the ballroom floor and the same number of concrete squares in the driveway.

Thirteen is almost universally considered an evil and unlucky number, but in ancient times it was supposed to be unlucky only for evil persons. Thus when Bluebeard, Gilles de Rais, was tried in France, twelve other offenders were tried with him to bring them all bad luck—which it did. However, as saints were scarce even in those days, and it was hard to get a convivial party all of whom were 100 per cent without sin, considerate hosts thoughtfully avoided that number, and soon it got so that nobody cared to take a chance.

Mrs. Winchester's ghostly guests evidently were of the most blameless sort, and, therefore, whatever evil is in that number fell on those reprehensible Indians and other undesirables. Our ancestors, after shooting one of the aborigines, used to remark pleasantly to each other that the only good Indian is a dead Indian. But for Mrs. Winchester a dead one was the worst kind.

Another mysterious freak of the mansion is that nearly every post in the house is upside down. From the mahogany newel post, inlaid with rosewood, one sees in the front hallway to the uprights, supporting the porch roofs, they are carefully inverted. Spiritualists are somewhat at a loss to account for this. They do not think that an Indian, alive or dead, would know whether a post was right side up or not, unless it happened to be a totem pole. It is surmised that inverted posts offended the eye of some white ghost who for some reason was not wanted around.

With her millions it would have been easy for the widow to have built a moat around the house and with pumps kept water running in it night and day. Bad spirits are notoriously afraid to cross running water, but unfortunately nice ghosts don't like to get their feet wet either. Also "water elementals," a sort of demon who had just as soon haunt you in the daytime as not, might be attracted.

Such a labyrinth of rooms and passages, with doors that opened one way, would seem to be the worst sort of fire trap. This would be especially dangerous in case a "fire elemental," indignant at the efforts to snub him, should set the place on fire. Evidently to prevent this, the walls are lined with asbestos and all open spaces stuffed with mineral wool.

One of the Many Curious Doorways With a Bar Across Them, Which Was Supposed to Interfere With the Easy Passage of Spectral Visitors.

The Astonishing Staircase Where It Was Necessary to Go Downstairs in Order to Go Up. The Camera Shows the Descending Staircase in the Immediate Foreground and the Ascending Staircase, Which Starts Right Up from the Bottom Landing. This Was Regarded as a Great Annoyance and Discouragement to Unfriendly Spooks

Besides the thirteen-globe chandeliers there are bracket lights on the walls and others in the floors and ceilings. It was not enough to have the house studded with electric light bulbs, there were hundreds of candlesticks and candles, gas jets everywhere and a private gas plant. This profusion of light, like the absence of mirrors, was not to chase away bad spirits, but to please the good ones.

The main reason that ghosts shun the light is said to be that they cast no shadow, which humiliates and makes them conspicuous. To put her spirit guests at their ease in her presence, Mrs. Winchester arranged the lighting so that there were no shadows at all. If we would all be as tactful as was kind old Mrs. Winchester, perhaps ghosts would not be the wild and shy creatures that they have become.

The Winchester house has five fully equipped kitchens. Besides herself and secretary, there were an army of servants and always quite a company of workmen. Sometimes she had American laborers fed from one kitchen, Japanese from another, Spaniards from a third and Mexicans from a fourth; so that the kitchens may not have had any direct spiritual significance.

Neither did the six great safes, set in concrete. These were simply to hold her various stealable treasures. The one in the wall of the ballroom contained the Winchester gold service, and every evening at an exact moment, after the dishes had been washed, two servants brought the precious plates to Vilma Banky's own experience points out the worth of real fresh lemon juice.

WHEN you talk of natural hair beauty my thoughts just sort of fly to real, fresh lemon juice rinses.

You see, my hair has a naturally glossy appearance and its pretty color shows in its true light—always. Again I say—real—fresh—lemon juice! I cannot say more.

I urge a real lemon rinse—the juice of two lemons in, say, four quarts of water after shampooing—because all soaps leave that thin curd on each hair. Use the fresh lemon rinse and that annoying stickiness and tendency to "mat" are removed entirely.

Fresh lemon juice is a mild, harmless acid; it leaves my hair clean and soft and natural in its glossy beauty—which is true hair beauty.

The Unlit Lamp By Sinclair Murray

The Story of a Modern Diana and a Search for the Treasure of Ancient Carthage

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

VERE CRAIG, something of a modern Diana, must raise $7,500 to pay a debt incurred by the extravagance of her younger sister, Lois. She cannot ask her father, a retired colonel, for the money, and the only other possibility is a trust fund of $10,000 she is to receive when she marries. Vere meets Michael Feverill, an explorer, who is about to leave for Africa, never to return. In desperation she asks Feverill to marry her.

Realizing that the girl is in trouble, Feverill agrees and they are secretly married an hour before he sails in search of the treasure of ancient Carthage. He leaves Vere his signet ring and a letter to his solicitors that will enable her to secure a divorce whenever she wishes.

Vere returns home to tell her sister that she has the money. Lois rushes in with the news that she has just won $8,250 on a bet placed several weeks previously on Crossbow for the Royal Hunt Cup. Lois can now pay back the money herself and Vere's marriage has been a useless sacrifice. The pain caused by the realization that she has done Feverill a great injustice keeps the young explorer constantly in Vere's mind and makes her more human, more sympathetic and doubly attractive.

In Algiers Feverill goes to the house of his friend, El Hadji, whom he tells of his plan to hunt the treasure of Carthage, which he believes lies hidden somewhere in the desert. The Arab shows him an ancient Roman gold piece that came to him from Largah, near the place where Feverill believes the treasure to be. El Hadji warns him of the extreme danger and then disguises the Englishman as a Berber, and gives him a letter to El Dhid in the oasis of El Harib, where he can learn the desert speech. Feverill—now El Nemir, the Panther—arrives at the home of El Dhid and meets the latter's daughter, Rezala, a beautiful child of the desert. Upon the girl's breast he recognizes another gold piece from the treasure of Carthage.

In England, meanwhile, Vere's friends, the Pollitts, plan a trip to Africa to inspect a newly discovered iron deposit, and Vere decides to accompany them, paying for the trip with the trust fund she received on the day of the marriage.

Vere and the Pollitts arrive in Africa and are met by Jules Casgrain, cultured French engineer and discoverer of the iron deposit, who hopes to interest Pollitt in investing. On the way to the iron mountain Vere is much attracted to the charming Frenchman. The night they reach it he tells Vere he loves her and asks her to marry him. She tells him that she is not free. The party plan a tour in the desert.

Feverill and Rezala are falling in love. She tells him of her dream about their finding the treasure, describing its hiding place accurately, and suggests that she, her father and El Nemir go in search of it. In his excitement El Nemir blurts out his acceptance in English.

Rezala, all the more eager to win him, promises to keep his secret. They start their search and at El Feija meet the Pollitt party. They decide to travel for awhile together, and start into the desert.

As the Brigand Looked at Vere Out of His Evil Eyes, the Girl Shuddered and Drew Away.

CHAPTER XXII.

DO you imagine that El Nemir is a diviner? I mean, can he read the sands?" Vere put the question to Casgrain eagerly.

The Frenchman asked, and, to his surprise, the man nodded, adding something very rapidly.

"He explains that he does not often do it, and the light is not good. Will you wait till tomorrow?"

"I'd much sooner now, if it's possible."

The man arose and said two words. Casgrain started off to gather more tamarisk under the stars, while he who called himself El Nemir went into the tent of El Dhid reappearing at once with the round brass tray that is both dining table and cloth to desert-born. When the fire was made up, he spread on the tray three inches of sand.

"Press your hand into it flat, palms down," said Casgrain.

Vere obeyed, wondering greatly.

There was left a ten-pointed pattern, over which the diviner bent in earnest scrutiny. Presently he passed his own hand over the surface, obliterating the pattern, and, forefinger straight, made several rows of shallow indentations. There seemed to be no design, and they ran from right to left like Arabic script.

Vere stared, first at these, then at the head bowed over them. Were they simulating the marks of the human beetle that was herself? Just then, and without looking up, the man muttered something.

"He asks why you came to Africa," interjected Casgrain in an odd tone.

"How extraordinary! Tell him that I—I came to look for something. But why in the world should he ask that?"

Casgrain shrugged his shoulders. "It is queer, yet these people often have what you call second sight. I've known them to make remarkable forecasts."

El Nemir, getting his answer, examined the furrowed layer of sand with seeming surprise. He began to talk, pausing momentarily for the interpreter to do his part.

"Tell her," he said slowly, "that it is written here that she will find, but the manner of the finding will be strange, nor will she know at first that she has found. A man came into her life, and went out again. She is trying to forget this man. And he himself—"

Vere gasped, and put her hand to her mouth. Casgrain, too, was startled.

"Is this man alive? Quick—ask him!"

"He has come to life," said El Nemir gravely.

Casgrain frowned at him. "Is this thing a riddle, that the dead come to life again?"

"The riddle is not explained here, but what this woman finds will not be that which she sought."

"Shall I find love?" faltered Vere.

"Yes, and a great love; it will be kindled by Shula es Sahra, the Flame of the Desert. But before that will come hunger and thirst and a great fear."

"And afterwards?"

El Nemir shook his head. "The sands tell me no more."

With a slow deliberate movement he tilted the tray so that it spilled a little sliding cascade onto the embers. The fire spluttered and expired. Starlight flowed in like a rising river, dipping them all in its thin diaphanous illumination. Then El Nemir rose, made a salutation and stalked off to the tent of El Dhid.

Her gaze followed him, saw him lift the three-cornered doorway of camel's hair and vanish in silence. She took a long, long breath and glanced wonderingly at Casgrain. He was watching her closely, and his eyes held a question that he dared not ask.

"What do you think of it?" her tone was very uncertain.

"Does that matter?"

"Yes," she said, with an honest look, "it does matter."

"Then—I cannot tell you. I do not know myself. At the moment I feel too much like a beetle."

CHAPTER XXIII.

ANOTHER day passed in seemingly ant-like progress beneath an untempered sun—and another—with the lurching stride of camels and the same panorama of yellow, red and brown. Mrs. Pollitt and Vere were fascinated by this new life of theirs, and too tired at night to talk about it. The caravan was now, striking along the foothills, with the high summits of the Berber mountains crowding up in the northwest. They had found no water on the first night, and on the second got but little save for the camels. And Casgrain now regarded the shrunken goatskins with increasing anxiety.

El Dhid, saying nothing, was also thinking hard. He wondered whether this expedition was too foolhardy. Rezala however, her eyes fixed on the slowly changing landscape, felt no doubts whatever. It was mid-afternoon when she stared with sudden interest at a curious formation of the hills.

"My father, we are near the place now."

He looked at her dubiously. "You know this country—you who have never been here before?"

"I cannot explain, but it is known to that part of me which journeys while I sleep." She pointed to an abruptly broken ridge that presented an outline like the profile of a bearded man. "I saw that in my dream."

"Were there not also two horns of rock, and between them sand, and a face of rock with a hole in it?"

She nodded. "That I saw, too. Keep more to the left, for it is not far from here. And now I would speak to El Nemir."

El Dhid waved his arm and Feverill rode up. He had been very silent during the last two days, avoiding both women, and riding much by himself. He wondered a great deal what Vere was thinking, made no mistake in interpreting the natural conclusions of Rezala, and gave himself up to the sheer inevitableness of life. It was all written—and this was Africa. Feverhill, in short, had undergone an emotional rebirth.

For Rezala he felt a curious compound of affection and regret, this girl who had offered everything and made her heart a book for him to read. He wondered that long ere this passion had not swept him away on its burning tide. Her dream now seemed no more strange than other events in this potent wilderness, and he believed in it. Also he was assured that in the womb of the future lay that which spelled the solution of all his problems. That solution appeared to embrace Casgrain. This was in his mind when he pulled up beside Rezala, and he thought he knew what she was going to say.

"Have I offended you?" she asked gently.

"Why do you ask? There can be no offence between us."

"You have spoken to me hardly at all for two days."

"A man speaks but little in the desert."

"Perhaps, but there is a difference between us. Last night when you and El Dhid were asleep you talked much and very quickly, and it was Negleez that you spoke, not Arabic. Also I often heard you say the name of that woman—but not my name at all. Did I not appear in that dream?"

"No," he said slowly, finding it hard to answer without hurting her, "not in that one. It was about my own country, and many things you would not understand."

He did not mean to be cruel, but could not have put it in a more unfortunate form. Understand? Then he doubted her intelligence! She caught her breath at that, this daughter of the desert who for the very first time had told a man that she loved him. Men had often called her Shula es Sahra because she set their hearts aflame. Had this one a stone for a heart?

"Have you ever loved me—as I loved?" she blazed out suddenly.

To that he could only make a gesture. A new Rezala this, all the softness gone out of her, her dark eyes full of pain and resentment.

"I kept nothing from you—have you done the same?" she stormed on, lips trembling. "Before you saw that other woman I was happy—but now——"

She broke off, remembering that it was to herself this meeting was due. All part of the dream, and why had she not realized the danger at the outset? She fingered the gold piece at her breast. Did the treasure of Karthad Hadtha bring a curse to those who sought it? Gold in the desert, and gold in that woman's hair. A double curse!

And Feverill, watching the transformations that flitted over this passionate face, knew that he had never truly loved her. Flame of the Desert she might be, and many a furnace she might have lit in the hearts of desert men, but he had been burned in the fire once. The vista of another kind of life broadened before him, and he aspired to that rather than to an intoxication that must soon expire of its own intensity. The body and brain of him were designed for better usage.

"Is this what you give me for trying to help you find what you seek?" she went on, her voice hardening. "To this hour I have kept your secret. Not even does El Dhid know that you are a Negleez. If he finds out, I think he will kill you, for he has spoken to you as he would never speak to a Roumi. Shall I tell him now, and tell them all?"

Feverill smiled at her bitterly. The thing must come before long, and of late he had had an increasing wonder that it should remain still undisclosed. His present life was a grotesque, deceptive and contradictory medley. But there persisted the conviction that of a sudden the medley would cease, the knotted tangle unloose itself. He could not imagine how—but he believed this with all his soul. What was written would take place. But the time was not quite come.

As for Rezala, he did not make the mistake of excusing himself, or telling her that she would be happier without him. He perceived quite clearly, now that his eyes were opened, that when this storm was over she would turn to another with the same ardour as she had shown him. That was her

She simply had applied X-Bazin Cream to the under-arms—left it on but five brief minutes—and then washed it off just like soap. She found her skin beautifully free from even the slightest trace of superfluous hair, as smooth and soft as if it had had a cream massage.

Thousands of women have followed the advice of beauty doctors, and used X-BAZIN cream depilatory made according to the formula of the famous French specialist, Dr. Xavier Bazin. New Hair Mode Seen in New York

The most beautiful girls in New York are doing their hair the new way. It's so lovely, but so simple. That's why it appeals to popular girls, who need to save time wherever they can. One of the busiest of them is attractive Mary Chandler, for three seasons a member of "George White's Scandals" and now appearing in "Artists and Models." She says: "I am so busy I don't know how I'd take care of my hair, if I hadn't learned the new way so many of my girl friends are doing theirs.

"All I do now is put a few dashes of Danderine on my brush each time I use it. This wonderful preparation keeps my hair looking so lovely that many friends want to touch it. I set my waves with Danderine, too, and it holds them ever so much longer. All dandruff disappeared with a few applications, and my scalp always feels fine. I shampoo just once a month, now. Danderine keeps my hair so clean."

Danderine removes that oily film from your hair and gives it new life and lustre. It makes hair easy to dress and holds it in place. It isn't oily and doesn't show. It gives tone and vigor to the scalp. All drug stores have the 35c bottles. A delicately fragranced necessity for the well-groomed girl.

nature. Strange that he himself did not stand irrevocably committed.

"Do not think of me at all," he said quietly. "Tell that which you desire to tell—to anyone."

She did not answer this, being divided between the sudden passing of her heart's dream, and the definite crystallizing into fact of that other vision of the treasure of Karthad Hadtha. Now, while El Nemir faded as a lover, the Berber hills seemed to be arranging themselves in some pre-appointed order. The gigantic profile sharpened against the sky, and in the flesh she revisited this spot whither she had journeyed days before across the gulf of sleep. The real displaced the phantom, and the knowledge of this thrilled her very soul.

She sent Feverhill a look in which pride struggled with anger, then pointed to the west.

"What I shall say, or when, I do not know; but there is the place I saw in my dream."

El Dhid, who had been watching her closely, saw the gesture and speeding his camel, caught her last words.

"Where is this place?"

"Straight for that low hill."

"But the horns of rock—I do not seem them?"

"Nor I, but they are there."

He jerked at his camel rein. The caravan fell in behind and slowly approached the foothills. The elevations were lower at this point, looking like rolling ridges of gravel-covered soil paralleling the edge of the desert. Outcroppings of rock projected through the arid surface, and, further back, began the slow gradations of greater heights that culminated finally in mountains. It was a curious effect, as though the earth itself had rolled up in gigantic waves, and, suddenly arrested, retained every original crest and valley. They were examining this uncompromising vista when Casgrain drew abreast.

"Is there water here?" he said in a low voice.

El Dhid made an indefinite motion. Just at that moment his camel straightened her long neck, swayed it up and down with a curious waving motion and expanded her slits of nostrils. Then she gave a hoarse grunt and quickened her dislocating pace. El Dhid took a deep breath of relief.

"Yes, there is water here."

He beckoned to Feverill and the two pushed forward. Casgrain, feeling much younger, nodded cheerfully at Rezala.

"I was very anxious and it is good news. The Negleez ladies are tired; so, after a day's rest, I think we should go east to the caravan route to Fez. This is what you intended?"

She gave him an odd smile, suggesting somehow that what the Negleez ladies felt was not very important.

"El Dhid will do that. Is it that the Negleez ladies have had enough of the desert in three days?"

"It is hard for them—the first time."

"And you are also tired?"

He laughed at her. "No, never tired of this. I cannot have too much. One part of me must be Bedouin."

"You are going to live in our country?"

"In the Jebel Ban, between El Felja and Marrakesh."

"In a tent?"

"No; I will build a house with thick walls, warm in Winter and cool in Summer. Water will run in pipes, and there will be great comfort. And you—you go back to El Harib."

"I never want to see El Harib again," she said with passionate earnestness.

Casgrain's brows went up a little. "El Nemir, have you told him that—and where does he want to live?"

She was on the point of bursting out with the truth when it flashed on her that it would be unwise to tell one Roumi that she was being passed over by another. Also there was something about this man that till now, and out of loyalty to her lover, she had put aside. But was he not going to build a house in the Jebel Ban?

"There is yet much to be talked with El Nemir." This with a toss of her graceful head.

Casgrain thought the better of her for it. He experienced again the same distaste at picturing her in the arms of an Arab—even an Arab philosopher—with the inevitable and later penalty paid by the wives of all Arabs. She had a spirit, an imagination.

"Your mother was not a Bedouin?"

"No, a Jewish woman of Fez."

"Would you like to learn English?"

"Yees—varry—mooch." She said this with a flashing smile, then, in Arabic, "was it from a woman that you learned my language?"

Casgrain laughed out. "I have learned nothing useful from any woman—yet."

She made a face at him, and was about to answer in kind when El Dhid, halted some way ahead, turned in his saddle and signalled. They pushed on and when they joined him he looked at his daughter with a strange expression, then pointed to something glittering in the sand. Casgrain gave an exclamation, and slid to earth.

It was a human skull, polished to a startling whiteness, the teeth grinned from the sagging jaw, the truncated nose bones spilling out a trickle of golden grains, and in the dome of the rounded cranium was a triangular hole. The thing gaped up at them with a sort of devilish irony. It suggested that they were not the first to seek the treasure of Carthage, and that all that might be found here was death.

A spell seemed to descend out of the keen, thin air. The others rode up, discerned the relic, and stopped. Mrs. Pollitt gave a queer little cry.

"Bob, do look at that! Do you suppose he died of thirst? Oh! See that hole! It's too ghastly for words. Mr. Casgrain, how long do you suppose it's been there? Murder, wasn't it?"

"I expect so, but one can't say how long ago."

"Well, I'm just as glad. Don't we get water here? I can't drink any more of that goatskin stuff."

"El Dhid says there is water," he assured her. "We'll find it presently."

She stared about, looking old, tired and exhausted. "But there isn't a green thing in sight—and how does he know?"

Casgrain hesitated, and just then the she-camel of El Dhid gave another hoarse impatient grunt, and struck into a jolting trot.

"Come along," said Casgrain, "that brute knows better than any of us. It's all right."

But was it all right? The sand deepened as they neared the foothills, and no trace of vegtation was visible. Immediately in front and three hundred yards away stretched a low ridge, and on either side of it knubs of rock projected above the sand as though flung from the distant summits. Rock—sand—earth—gravel—nothing else could be discerned, and the need of water was now very great.

El Dhid, swaying jerkily, turned to Rezala, "You are sure—very sure?"

For answer she pointed to the center of the nearest and lowest ridge, where he made out a dark spot like the elongated socket of an eye. The she-camel made straight for this, halting with a titanic jolt and extending her quivering nose. The hole—for it was a hole in the face of the rock—was about four feet long and only a foot high.

"Get down and dig," commanded El Dhid, greatly comforted.

Hussein obeyed, scooping at the dry sand and flinging it out like a mole between his straddling legs. The hole enlarged steadily. When the man had dropped three feet, still in sand, he lay flat and crawled out of sight. There came a muffled shout. Then silence. Presently he emerged, his bearded face dripping.

"Kebeer nekkee ain; bezzef ma innah," he grinned. "There is a large clean pool, and plenty of water here."

Mrs. Pollitt squeaked with satisfaction. "Bob, my mouth is full of cinders, and I want a bath. Do you realize I haven't had one for eight days?"

"Sorry," he laughed, "but I think it will be another eight yet. What about it Casgrain?"

"I'm afraid it will, and one doesn't bathe out here. What a miracle of luck this is, but no baths this side of Fez. Hullo! What is it now?"

Rezala, who had been sitting motionless in the saddle, gave a sudden exclamation and dismounted in one quick smooth slide. She darted forward and picked something glittering from the upcast sand. Feverill knew what it was, and held his breath. She hesitated for a second, then sent him the strangest possible look, and handed the coin to Casgrain.

"Take it—from the treasure of Karthad Hadtha!"

Feverill's face was sphinxlike, but the English travellers stared at each other, and Mrs. Pollitt, forgetful of fatigue, began a ripple of excited questions. Casgrain stood with the gold piece in his hand, glancing mystified from Rezala to her lover. Why this gift to himself? But the gray eyes of El Nemir held only a faint amusement.

"There is something to be said concerning this business," broke in El Dhid with dry authority, "but it can wait till camp is made. Meantime there is food and water."

This, being translated, meant nothing to Mrs. Pollitt, who desired to explore the cave forthwith. Pollitt, however, intervened and the men became busy. She and Vere commenced to poke in the sand, and presently found another coin.

"The place is a perfect mint," she called to Casgrain, "come and help us. What did that girl say to you just now, and why didn't she give the thing to her lover?"

Casgrain, who knew why by this time, was not prepared to say.

"What do you suppose we've unearthed?" she went on, scooping vigorously. "And how in the world did we come straight here, and, if that old Arab was looking for this sort of thing, why on earth did he invite us?"

Casgrain, playing for time, only laughed. "I fancy we'll hear of that shortly. Come and inspect that cave now, perhaps you'd like to sleep in it."

It was very small, some ten feet in diameter. Mrs. Pollitt peered about in the semi-darkness. Most of its irregular floor formed the bottom of a round pool, crystal clear and some twenty inches deep. In the middle of it was an invisible jet springing from a tiny sand lined crater, evidently the supplying spring. The overflow slid in a thin transparent lip of water through a miniature sluice in the edge of this great natural bowl, disappearing instantly in the sand that at this point lay smooth against the rock. Around this secret well of the foothills there was just room to stand. The air seemed cold and a little clammy.

"It's perfectly wonderful," said Mrs. Pollitt, dabbling her hot fingers, "but I couldn't sleep here. I'd roll in. What about you, Vere?"

"I'd sooner be outside anyway." She shivered a little, and looked wonderingly at Casgrain. "Don't you think it very strange that the girl found that at all?"

"Yes, and if the sand had been a foot higher outside we'd have missed it. You notice that it got heavier after we turned—evidently blown in and trapped here."

She nodded. "I saw that—and where do you imagine these gold pieces have come from—is mine the same as yours?"

They compared coins. The same relief of bold nose and close curly hair. JVSTINIAN IMP on each. Casgrain reflected, then gave an exclamation.

"Carthaginian money under the Roman rule—that's it. Rezala spoke of Karthad Hadtha, which is the Arabic for Carthage—but how did she know them?" He puzzled a moment, then shook his head. "El Dhid is going to say something about this, so we'd better wait."

"Well," announced Mrs. Pollitt stretching herself stiffly, "I'll catch my death of cold if I stay here, but I did hope to see gold running out of a lot of rotten boxes and bags like it does in 'Treasure Island.' And that girl—have you been flirting with the bride-elect? You know," here she

"BORN AND RAISED in San Diego, the playground of California, I lived an active outdoor life—riding, swimming, golfing—and as a result I always had good health. But around the time of my high school graduation, I became run down. Too many parties and dances, I guess—and then there was the senior play. The vice-principal tried to get me to withdraw from the play. But I didn't want to do that. It happened that my father was an ardent Yeast enthusiast. I decided to try it myself. I began eating three cakes every day. To my surprise I was better within a month, and in two months I was entirely well and vigorous. I was soon able to begin my preparations for college. Now, whenever I feel the slightest return of sluggishness, I go back to eating Yeast again."

"But I take no chances of another breakdown in my health," says Frederick D. Wade

"By the time I was 15 years old my mother had given up trying to keep me at home.

"I worked my way around the world on tramp steamers, then entered college, specializing in journalism. But constant study and overtraining in athletics brought on indigestion.

"When I graduated I was suffering from a bad case of 'nerves'—practically a breakdown. But heeding a suggestion of an athletic trainer I began eating 3 cakes daily of Fleischmann's Yeast.

"In 3 or 4 months I was well—my nerves as steady as the iron in the construction jobs on which I worked for a time after leaving college. I am writing short stories and articles now. But I still eat Yeast—to keep myself in shape." Frederick D. Wade

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST is not a medicine but a food—wholesome, fresh as any vegetable.

Yet this food has unusual virtue in correcting certain common ills—indigestion, skin troubles, "nerves." Ills such as these generally come from an unclean intestinal tract. Fleischmann's Yeast keeps the intestines active, clean. Brings healthful "regularity."

You can get Fleischmann's Yeast from any grocer. Buy two or three days' supply at a time and keep in any cool, dry place. Write for a free copy of the latest booklet on Yeast in the diet. Address Health Research Dept. S-53, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York City.

"THERE IS quite a contrast in my hobbies—radio announcing and hiking in the mountains. Broadcasting, especially, requires enthusiasm and a mind constantly alert. My own enthusiasm was, however, badly dampened by boils.

"I tried every cure suggested—no results. At last I began eating Fleischmann's Yeast. Picture my relief as the boils gradually disappeared!" Herbert Ward

Miss Margaret Alexander's mother writes:

Philadelphia, Pa.

"MY DOCTOR had prescribed Fleischmann's Yeast for my brother-in-law, and I knew it was good for children as well. So when my daughter became constipated it was the first thing I thought of giving her.

"At first I gave it to her dissolved in milk, but later she ate it just like candy. In about a month's time she became perfectly normal again.

"Now, whenever she goes into a store with me she says, 'Don't forget the Yeast cakes, Mother.' They have been nuggets of gold to me." Mrs E M Alexander

How thousands have found health—easily, naturally:

Eat three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast regularly every day, one cake before each meal or between meals. Eat it just plain, or dissolved in water (hot or cold) or any other way you like. For stubborn constipation physicians recommend drinking one cake in a glass of hot water—not scalding—before each meal and before going to bed. And train yourself to form a regular daily habit. As you are benefited by eating Yeast you can gradually discontinue dangerous, habit-forming cathartics.

The Child's Teeth.

A CHILD'S whole appearance may be spoiled by neglecting the teeth called "the six-year molars," which are often mistaken for temporary teeth. These teeth usually appear at about six years of age. Watch them carefully.

Liver as a Food.

FRESH liver should be served at least once a week, as it is fully as nourishing as beef, fish or chicken. A spoonful of chopped raw liver with a little orange juice is a tonic for a convalescent.

THE ANSWER PLAIN AND CONVINCING

Why do so many people of all ages prefer that their cod-liver oil be emulsified?

The answer is plain and convincing.

They have demonstrated by experience that scientifically emulsified cod-liver oil as in Scott's Emulsion is far more agreeable in taste and easily and rapidly digested or assimilated than is ordinary liquid cod-liver oil.

The important reason why cod-liver oil should be taken emulsified is that fats or oils are not digested in the same sense as starchy or protein foods are, but must first be emulsified in the body before they can be utilized as nourishment.

Nature understood the needs of the body and that while fats are an important factor in the daily diet, they are more easily digested when emulsified.

Hence milk, a natural emulsion, is recognized by science as one of the most necessary foods, rich in emulsified fats for the nourishment and health of the human body.

Scott's Emulsion is patterned after milk. It is scientifically emulsified cod-liver oil, biologically tested, rich in rickets-preventing, growth-promoting and resistance-building vitamins, prepared for easy and rapid digestion, just as Nature has provided emulsified fats in milk.

Scott's Emulsion, pleasant-tasting, easy to take, enables every member of your family, child or grown person, to absorb the health-giving benefits of cod-liver oil and its wonderful vitamins efficiently.

The Unlit Lamp

By Sinclair Murray

paused, knitting her sunburned brows, "I rather feel that we're on the edge of an explosion of some sort."

"There's not much to explode in the desert, is there?"

"There are all kinds of human things that can blow up: for instance that Arab—I mean the panther man. That philosophy of his you were talking about might not work in a case like this. Do you feel just a shade uncomfortable—in the small of your back? I would."

It was a laughing thrust, but it got home. Casgrain did feel uncomfortable, and had felt thus ever since El Nemir looked up from his reading of the riddle of the sands to tell Vere that she would find, not knowing that she had found. This could hardly refer to Casgrain himself. And Vere, also, had been distrait. Was something reaching at her out of the past, drawing her away from him?

"Aren't you a bit creepy, too, Vere, with all those bones and skulls about? The place is a regular morgue! Ugh!"

She shivered again, and crawled into the sunlight, the others after her. Here life was more normal. One of the white tents was up, the unloaded camels were resting, Pollitt and Rezala had begun a treasure hunt, Ali was emptying the flabby goatskins into the thirsty sand, Hussein was striding about collecting shreds of windblown tamarisk, and El Nemir sat talking earnestly to El Dhid.

"Just like home, and look at Bob trying to be coy with that girl. What's the matter with you, Vere?"

Vere was staring at the two Nomads who stood very close together and fifty yards from the tent. On the journey these uncouth, wild-looking men had spoken hardly at all except to the camels, and always slept beside the beasts they drove. They ate like animals, were inconceivably dirty, and their limited speech seemed only a series of monosyllables. But, she assured herself, Casgrain must know what he was doing when he engaged them.

"It's queer," she said uneasily, "but the one on the left looked as though he were signalling."

"What!" How signalling?" Casgrain's voice was sharp.

"I suppose it was only my fancy, but he seemed to wave his arm toward the hills."

"In what direction—don't point—just tell me?"

"Immediately behind us, where the big rocks are above the cave." Her eyes opened wide and she fought back a sudden sensation of fear. "What could that be for—please tell me?"

Casgrain's lips tightened a little, then he laughed. "Most likely nothing at all. Perhaps he's been here before and is telling the other fellow." He glanced at Mrs. Pollitt, who was a few paces ahead. "Will you two please join El Dhid just as casually as you know how. Don't look round as you go, or take any notice of me, and don't be anxious about anything. Please no questions—but do what I ask."

Their eyes met, and he knew that she understood that there was danger. But what was in his mind? Skull—bones—gold—it was all of a kind, and this place had already begun to weigh heavily on her nerves.

"All right—but please don't do anything risky. We—we need you rather badly."

He nodded approvingly, lit a cigarette and walked slowly toward the ridge. He had a shrewd idea of what might lie behind it, for this was the no-man's-land of Africa, and its rule lay with the strong. But, he reasoned, with El Dhid in the party there was not likely to be any grave danger. To his knowledge, Arab did not rob Arab. He was halfway to the summit of the rise when he saw a metallic glint amongst the rocks.

His hand leaped to his hip—but not quickly enough. From the rocks came a crack that sang through the desert stillness. He felt a stinging pain dart through his right shoulder. Steadying himself for a second of time, he saw a line of men spring into vision as though the whole hillside had come to life, and race toward him, rifles brandished high in air.

A scream sounded from the camp. His shoulder was on fire, but he managed to jerk out his revolver—and shoot once. A tall, tattered figure crumpled up and came rolling down, its head wobbling grotesquely. Then the world began to swim, and he knew nothing more.

CHAPTER XXIV.

IT was all very complete, sudden and successful. Four unsuspecting men are wiser not to attempt to fight thirty, especially with traitors in camp. One there was who ached to fight, but it came to him in a flash that now, if ever, disguise might be very precious, so the man who called himself El Nemir made no more resistance than the rest.

Thus, in the space of a very few moments the Nomads from the Springs of Dra sat in two circles, rifles across their knees. In the centre of one were the Pollitts, Vere and Casgrain. Pollitt was dumb with anger and astonishment. Vere did her best to calm her friend's hysterics, and Casgrain lay on his back, already roughly bandaged, but weak from loss of blood. In the other and more informal circle was the party of El Dhid.

By valley and ravine these wild men of the south had followed, skirting the desert, but never actually showing themselves on its flat plain, never out of sight of the caravan of El Dhid, and never in sight themselves. By day they had kept pace, hiding the appointed time when camp should be made close to the hills and enable a sudden approach; and every night, sitting invisible on their haunches, they had watched the spearhead of the Roumi fire.

It was good booty and worth waiting for. Not from the very first had Ahmed, the ruffian with no end to his nose, wavered a moment in his decision. The word came from Massoud, and in affairs like this Massaud's judgment was admirable. So on the arrival of the messenger from El Felja there had been running to and fro by the Springs of Dra.

The discovery, from a cranny of the Jebel Ban, that the party had increased to five more than were mentioned by Massoud was a slight surprise, but Ahmed had strength enough and to spare. And until that final rush down from the ridge he was entirely ignorant of how the increase was made up. Now that he knew who it was, he worried not at all. A slight delay in the journey of El Dhid would be necessary—but nothing more.

With this in mind, he put his tongue in his cheek and began to talk glibly to the merchant, one eye on the merchant's daughter. Never before had he seen a desert woman like this, not even in the country of the Ouled Nails. El Dhid, furious and outraged, could hardly find words to answer with. El Nemir sat without speaking, his brain on fire, thinking his hardest. Only one whisper had he managed to get to Rezala—warning her that this was no time for revelations on her part. So he had that much to start with. Eyes narrowed, he stared at the camels of Ahmed. One of them, and the best of the lot, was a Sharari racing beast like his own.

Ahmed began by assuring El Dhid that no harm was intended to anyone, and the way out was only a very little money, so little that a rich man would not miss it. El Dhid spat contemptuously and shook his head.

"The way out for you is death, oh Foal of a Murderer. The desert will rise up and swallow you. Let us go now before it is too late, and it may be that I will speak one word in your favor. You will have great need of that word."

"The throat of the desert is wide enough to swallow me and these men. And the Roumis are rich—like all Roumis."

"What they have, I know not, but I can put my wealth in one hand and there be room to spare. Since when does Arab rob Arab?"

Ahmed showed his rusty teeth. "You do me injustice, merchant of El Harib, and Arab does not yet rob Arab unless by short weight. Therefore you and your daughter—whose teeth are like pearls—and this Berber whose speech has dried on his tongue, shall be my guests till the Negleez have satisfied my small wants. This lest, being at liberty, you peradventure talk too much."

El Dhid glared at him. "What shall seal my mouth later on?"

"One thing only—lest I take a fancy to wed your daughter. I can afford another wife with what the Negleez will pay. Which of them is it that speaks Arabic?"

El Dhid choked a little over that, and Rezala sent Feverill an imploring glance. But he, like the rest, had been disarmed, and now it was more than ever unwise to proclaim that he, too, was a Negleez. As to marrying this cutthroat, she would kill herself first.

Ahmed gave a contented grunt, and stalked over to the other circle, full of his own importance. Mrs. Pollitt began to tremble and clutched Vere's arm.

"Did you ever see such a filthy brute, and look at that nose! Bob, what on earth can we do?"

Pollitt, a good deal shaken, tried not to show it. "Pay our way out, I suppose. That's all he wants, and there's nothing else for it. Don't let him see that you are afraid. Casgrain, how are you feeling now?"

Casgrain tried to smile, but his skin was a sickly gray under the tan. He blamed himself bitterly for this affair. Pollitt's assumed cheerfulness only made matters worse and the chipped shoulder blade was the more serious because it left him helpless. He looked up into Ahmed's black eyes and vowed to run this man to earth if it took years.

"What is it you would say now?"

"To begin with, this. I did not come here for blood, and that you were shot is on your own head. It was not my will."

Casgrain got a glimpse of Vere's agonized face and pulled himself together.

"Don't antagonize him," she pleaded. "Promise anything to get us out of this."

"I'll pay the brute's price," struck in Pollitt, "and don't you worry about anything—if you can help it. The French Government will have to make good to me, if I know anything about it."

Ahmed listened to this exchange, his ugly head a little on one side, deciding that the woman with the gold hair ought to bring an excellent price—anywhere. In fact he rather hesitated about including her at all. As he looked at her out of his evil eyes, the girl shuddered and drew away. With her and the other girl, Paradise would have no special attractions for him. Casgrain, catching the sudden gleam in his eyes, gave Vere a low warning.

"Don't look at him; take no notice whatever, and let your veil fall." Then, struggling with pain, he met the hardening gaze of the Nomad.

"You know what the end of this will be?"

Ahmed pushed out his purple lips and smiled indulgently.

"When the scorpion catches the lizard, the French soldiers will catch me, and there is not a wrinkle in the sands between here and the great river (he meant the Niger) that I do not know."

"The lizard sleeps when the scorpion walks by night and that will be the end. What is your price?"

"Very easy for a rich man. For each of you three, fifty thousand francs, and for her with the gold hair a hundred thousand."

Casgrain regarded him contemptuously. "Are the Roumis fools that they journey in the desert with sums like this?"

"It were wisdom that those who meet me carry with them the cost of the meeting. Now there will be a letter written to Marrakesh, either by you or the other Roumi, and after the writing you shall read it to me in my own tongue. Then it will be taken very swiftly by one of my own men. After him a few hours' journey shall follow another, and after that one yet a third. And if within seven days the third comes not back with the money, there will have been a trick in that letter, and we go from here into the desert to wait—but not by the Springs of Dra. Also, for the freedom of those who come not again, I shall take payment according to my desire."

It was very crafty and utterly safe, and Casgrain smothered a curse. The man was shrewd, determined, and his eyes ruthless. The concealed animal in him peered through those eyes demanding liberty—and license—and who was there in these solitudes to say him nay? Only one course left now—to avoid the unspeakable.

"Well?" interjected Pollitt. "We're cornered, so we might as well be practical. What's the ransom?"

Casgrain told him, giving only the total, and without any reference to Vere. She must never know that.

"Seven days to do it in," he added, aware that Ahmed was searching his face. "The beast is clever enough to cover himself against any countermove of ours."

"Can't we stick anything between the lines of that letter—something a banker would understand?"

"He's crafty enough to have provided against that. I don't see any loophole."

"I haven't got that much money in Marrakesh, but could have it wired from Algiers." He was going on to ask about the alternative, but Casgrain's expression stopped that. "Can you explain to this brigand how it stands?"

Casgrain forced down his revolt, and put the thing into Arabic, while Ahmed, seeing the point at once, regretted making the price so low.

"I will give him another day to have the money sent over the wires," he said, wondering how such a thing was done. "But after that—" He paused, gave Vere one furtive glance, and shrugged his shoulders. "By the grave of my father I will not wait longer. And the letter?"

"Tell him it will be ready in half an hour," put in Pollitt hastily. "My word! Casgrain, suppose you had not talked Arabic!"

"Suppose I had not been fool enough to let you take this trip?" replied the other man bitterly.

Ahmed swaggered off, well content. His reputation was made, and there would be talk of this affair in many a Touareg camp. Which ever way it went, he did not stand to lose. Money or women—it would be one of these. And as matters stood they seemed of equal value.

Mrs. Pollitt gazed, stupefied, at his retreating figure, mustered her courage and gave a very shaky laugh.

"I know what I'm worth to an Arab anyway. Mr. Casgrain, do you remember what I said in that case about something exploding soon?"

"You were right enough."

"Yes—but I never dreamed of this. I was thinking of you and the panther man. What a chicken heart he must have!"

"What could he do more than the rest of us?" argued Pollitt. Four men against thirty! He hadn't a chance."

Exposure—chill—muscles knotted with pain

260 Gloucester fishermen said, "This gives quickest relief.."

NO HARDIER, heartier class of men lives than the men of the fishing fleets.

Nothing daunts them—raging gales, mountainous waves, sudden and heavy strains, the freakish accidents of the sea.

How do they manage to avoid colds, rheumatism, stiffening of the muscles when they've been facing icy seas in an open boat? How do they relieve the aching of tired muscles when they've been straining over the heavy nets? What do they do for the sprains, wrenches, bruises that are bound to occur in an adventurous life like theirs?

We asked numbers of the fishermen of the famous old fishing town of Gloucester, Mass., to answer these questions.

260 said, "We use Sloan's."

The best friend of all who face exposure and strain

It's the same story everywhere among people who have to face exposure or strain. Policemen, postmen, firemen, factory workers, farmers—they all say they rely on Sloan's Liniment to rid them of rheumatic aches, stiffness of the muscles, the pain of sprains and bruises.

Read this account of how a bad case of stiff neck was completely relieved in less than five minutes:

"I was working and got a little warm, and it turned in and rained. I got good and wet. I got a stiff neck and could not turn my head. I used Sloan's and the pain left me in less than five minutes." S. K. Smalley, 75 Union Ave., Bellevue, Pa.

Sloan's Liniment doesn't just deaden the pain. It draws new blood into the stiff muscle, the torn ligament, the rheumatic joint; and stops the pain by driving out congestion, and sweeping away germs and poisons. Get a bottle. You can never tell when it may save you hours of agony. A bottle that lasts a long time costs only 35c—at all druggists.

One of the Gloucester fishermen. They protect themselves from strain and exposure with Sloan's

A doctor who takes care of thousands of workers says: "People whose work exposes them to strain or to damp and cold usually suffer from a good deal of muscular soreness. We find that Sloan's gives them quick, positive relief."

Use Sloan's Liniment for all kinds of muscular pain. It relieves:

Rheumatism	Lame Muscles
Sciatica	Stiff Neck
Lumbago	Colds
Neuralgia	Congestions
Sprains	Bruises

Seals of Silence

By Roy Vickers

his wits. Well, we kept in touch, though my reputation, especially for surgical cases, stood high. Until this fatal case my other life had never interfered with my work. My patient was very rich and her son was—infatuated with me. I saw that if the Greek could get rid of her for me, I need never work again. He agreed to help me. We had to do it quickly."

"Why?" asked Dale, his lips stiff with horror.

"Because she got information about us and said quite suddenly, 'Will you please resign as my nurse tomorrow morning? Give any reason you like to the doctor. I shall tell my son the truth.' I telephoned to the Greek and told him."

"He knew a good deal about medicine and he knew just what to do. The patient wasn't dangerously ill and her medicine was given in small doses. He told me the full bottle contained a fatal dose. I gave her the full bottle and he supplied me with another so that the next morning when the doctor looked at the bottle there was just the right amount there. She died under treatment—there was no inquest. That's all."

"All? Why did you quarrel with him?"

"Because I cheated him and he found out," explained the nurse slowly. "He didn't know that I was going to marry the son. Because I wouldn't give the boy up. He swore he'd destroy me."

"You are still going to marry the son?"

"If I get through today alive, I am."

"Not if I can prevent it!"

As the words burst from Dale's lips, the nurse sprang to her feet; her features convulsed.

"You're going to give me away after all?"

"No!" thundered Dale. "Can you not understand that I represent moral and not criminal law? I tell you you dare not marry him. You do not repent your sin, you say! It's because you are too great a coward to examine your own conscience."

"In the same circumstances I'd do it again!"

"You would not do it again. Tonight you have heard the voice of God. You will not dare to sin again."

With a choked cry she fell upon the floor at his feet and clutched his knees.

"If you were with me, I would be all you could wish!" she cried. "You could do anything with me—anything!"

Roughly, Dale freed himself.

"Get up!" he commanded, his voice thick with disgust.

She stumbled to her feet and stood like a whipped dog, awaiting his next words. Without another glance, he went to the door and flung it open.

"Follow me, please!"

Submissively she followed him through a short passage to the outer door. There she laid her hand upon his arm.

"Don't be angry with me," she said softly. "Please don't send me out of your life like this!"

Dale made no response. He lead her across the old churchyard to the gates.

"This is a side street," he said. "I will take you to the main street and then I can do no more for you."

Under the lamp-post at the corner he stopped.

"There is an underground station opposite," he told her curtly. "I should advise you to make for it."

Again she said nothing, but gave him a slow, sidelong look. It seemed to him that evil lurked in it.

She walked slowly away. Reluctantly he considered escorting her across the street and hastened in the direction in which she had gone. He stopped as he saw her standing in conversation with a taxi-driver who was telling her something and she was listening—and laughing.

Dale turned and walked back to the vicarage, his soul sick within him.

At 3 o'clock the following afternoon, Aileen Southcombe in the vicarage drawing room stood before a long mirror and studied herself, frowning a little. In her own eyes she was just a fair-haired girl of medium height. To the rest of the world she was an enchanting vision.

"There he is!"

She darted away from the mirror and waited in sudden shyness near the hearth.

Gordon Dale rushed in. He had not changed a scrap outwardly, but when with her hands crushed in his, she returned his gaze, she noticed a subtle difference. He looked older and more self-confident.

"It's good to see you again, Aileen!"

"Yes, Gordon?"

He was looking at her with wonderment, as though he found her for the first time fair to look upon. Aileen felt her lips trembling.

"You've grown up," he said, "into an amazingly beautiful girl."

Aileen motioned him to a seat at her side on the divan.

"But, Gordon, I'm twenty-three!" she protested.

He laughed.

She clasped her hands round her knees and looked into the fire. There was an ache in her heart, but as yet she dared not ask herself its meaning.

"Tea?" she asked.

"Not just yet. I want to give you my news before father comes in and ask your advice."

Advice! And she had thought—pride and breeding came to her rescue and she smiled at him in sisterly fashion.

"I'm engaged to be married," he began.

"Oh, Gordon, I do hope you will be happy!"

It was easy enough to say that but so difficult to go on smiling pleasantly, when he raved about his wonderful, beautiful and clever fiancee.

"But she's had rather a hard time, and you can image how I want to make up for it by giving her all I can."

His face clouded for a moment. Then he turned toward her and began to speak fast.

"What I wanted to ask your advice about, Aileen, was this: Cora—her name is Cora Brierly—has already come into contact with our family under circumstances that might make a difference in father's welcome of Cora as a daughter-in-law. He won't be prejudiced against her, but he might associate her with memories that he wants to forget. Now, don't you think it would be better for you to meet her first and like her and tell him later?"

"Perhaps it would," returned Aileen slowly. "I'm worried about Uncle Hugh. He grieves so much for Aunt Mary. He ought not to be reminded of her death."

"I'd like him—and you, too—to know her and like her entirely on her merits," Gordon said wistfully.

"When shall we meet her, Gordon?"

Gordon grinned boyishly. "My plan was to ask father and then bring Cora here this evening."

"Uncle Hugh has a meeting this evening," said Aileen. "Perhaps Miss Brierly will come to dinner?"

"Oh, she'll come! I'll go to her apartment and give her your invitation."

Glancing at the clock, Aileen saw, to her amazement, that it was only half-past three. It seemed as though Gordon had been back for hours.

To her intense relief, she heard Dale's voice in the hall outside. He opened the door and came eagerly into the room.

"Gordon! My dear, dear boy!" the vicar was saying. "I'm very proud of you. You've done well!"

Gordon's laugh was a trifle unsteady. "I've got news for you, father." Aileen rose and slipped out of the room.

* * *

Dinner at the vicarage was set for half-past seven. At seven o'clock, Dale and Aileen met before the drawing room fire.

In her simple black lace gown Dale thought that she looked almost ethereal. Her color had faded and there were shadows under her eyes, but her lips smiled a gallant greeting to her guardian.

She rested a hand upon his shoulder.

"Dear Uncle Hugh, don't let's pretend. We both thought that Gordon cared for me in a different way. It isn't his fault that he doesn't."

"I still find it difficult to believe that he doesn't. Young men are very often curiously blind, Aileen."

The girl lifted her eyes to his.

"I don't think it is true in Gordon's case. We must take her on her merits. Gordon is anxious that we should."

Dale sighed. He was disappointed in his son's indifference to Aileen's charm. The memory of his interview with the nurse haunted him. He considered it the most terrible experience of his life. Wherever he looked he seemed to see her face and to feel her hands about his knees. Her attitude towards him had filled him with loathing.

Aileen's voice boke in on his thoughts.

"I think I hear them now, Uncle Hugh."

Dale heard footsteps and voices. The door was flung open and a woman entered.

For an instant, Dale thought that his reason had become affected. He faced a tall woman—nearly as tall as Gordon—wearing a wonderful gleaming gown. A gold ribbon encircled her masses of bronze-brown hair. Dale stared at her heart-shaped face, her eyes set widely apart and of velvety brown,

DANDRUFF

Not until the last vestige of dandruff is gone, can you be considered a fastidious person, acceptable socially

Checks dandruff . . . soothes the scalp

Don't put up with a humiliating case of dandruff, and the itching burning sensation of the scalp that usually accompanies it.

At the first sign of dandruff, douse Listerine on the hair full strength and massage the scalp thoroughly. Keep this treatment up systematically for several days.

You will be delighted to find your dandruff disappearing rapidly. And you will welcome that cool refreshing feeling that Listerine imparts to the scalp. For those few whose hair does not contain the normal amount of oil, the use of a little olive or castor oil after shampoo may prove an advantage.

It is a curious fact that in many cases this simple pleasant treatment has succeeded after complicated and costly ones have failed. Lambert Pharmacal Co., St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

flecked with gold. He could never mistake that face or those eyes.

"Father, this is Cora."

Dale advanced a step or two. He saw the woman become deadly pale. She had recognized him! Then he was not insane.

This woman, whom his son wished to marry, had murdered another woman and had yesterday been in fear of her own life.

"How do you do, Mr. Dale?" she said.

Her voice was faint.

Gordon, baffled by the strange reception, was drawing Aileen forward and introducing the woman to her also.

The whole horrible situation had become pitilessly clear to Dale.

This woman was a murderess. But her secret had become his under the seal of the confessional. Not one word would he be able to utter to warn his son. And she knew it. There was hard purpose in her eyes and in her voice when next she spoke.

"I am afraid Gordon's news was too great a surprise for you, Mr. Dale."

Dale moved his lips but no words came. The already horrible situation had shifted a little, had rearranged itself—had become more than horrible—diabolical!

He remembered his question, "You are going to marry the son?" And her answer, "If I get through today alive, I am."

The son was Gordon. His son. Then—then—oh, God!

"Were you my wife's nurse when she died?" he asked harshly.

The woman cowered. Gordon stepped forward.

"Why, father, how on earth did you know that?"

Slowly, painfully, Dale tore his eyes from her face and turned to his son. To that question he realized an answer would imperil the secrecy of the confessional.

His lips were sealed. If this woman, who had murdered Gordon's mother, was determined to marry Gordon, nothing could be said or done by him to prevent it.

CHAPTER IV.

"FATHER, how did you guess that Cora was mother's nurse? I wanted that to remain a secret until you had learned to love Cora as a daughter."

Gordon, bewildered, turned from his father to Aileen. The girl forced a smile and answered the unasked question.

"No, I did not tell Uncle Hugh—I didn't know myself, Gordon, but after you mentioned Miss Brierly's previous association with our family it wasn't hard to guess."

Dale was aware that Aileen had thrown herself into the breach because she divined something of the tumult that was raging within him. His eyes were upon his wife's murderess and he marveled that his mind could grasp the situation and yet retain its sanity . . . Gordon repeated his question and Dale answered evasively.

"Yes, I did guess, Gordon, much against my own wishes. You were, perhaps, a little too mysterious."

In every fibre his manhood was urging him to denounce this murderess and give her up to vengeance—or, better still, to take his own vengeance. Yet he had lied and defended her.

"I am sorry that our first meeting should be so distressing to you, Mr. Dale." The rich voice faltered. "I hope the past will make no difference in your attitude toward me as your son's wife?"

The priest might remember the sanctity of confession. The man refused to be trapped.

"I cannot promise that," he said harshly. He saw Gordon flush and draw himself up. Aileen's face was full of pain. He saw that he had struck terror to Cora Brierly's cowardly heart.

* * *

At the top of a quiet house in a quiet Westminster square, an old lady with uncannily bright eyes was in consultation with her doctor.

"You are not alarmed, then, by this prolonged unconsciousness?" she demanded.

"Oh, no. Not in the least. There will be great weakness when consciousness returns, but nothing else. No bones are broken and the cuts are not deep. A marvelous escape, from what you tell me of the accident."

"I see in today's paper that the fog caused an enormous number of similar accidents. I only hope that they ended as lightly."

"I don't suppose that all the victims received such kindness as this man has at your hands, Countess. Apparently it was quite as much his fault as yours——"

"Good evening, doctor."

Countess Xanti, turning abruptly away from the doctor, limped back to the spacious room from which she had come. As she opened the door a girl, in the act of leaving, jumped back to save herself.

"I was just going for fresh compresses, grandmama. . . . Did Dr. Britten think that he is better?"

The girl was young, but had exceptional poise. Her grave face was lighted up by wonderful dark gray eyes.

"Dr. Britten didn't know, so he thought all was going very well," was the old lady's dry answer. "We had better renew the compresses. Send Achmed with them in about half an hour. I will stay here until he comes."

At this dismissal, the girl's pale cheeks flushed, as she walked out of the room. Her grandmother called after her:

"Juliette!"

The girl turned but did not go back.

"Yes, grandmama?"

"I am obliged to you for looking after a man of whom we know nothing—"

"Do you really know nothing of him, grandmama?"

Countess Xanti was for the first time in her life without a ready retort. Juliette Brendon went quickly down the stairs and disappeared behind an orange velvet curtain.

"Chit!" ejaculated the Countess, but she chuckled and added: "She's not growing up into a fool, thank heavens!"

She closed and locked the door, then made her way to the bed which stood between two windows. She sank into an armchair and scrutinized the face of the man who had been knocked down by her car nearly twenty-four hours before.

Countess Xanti studied the thin line of the mouth, the high cheekbones and the long, dark eyelashes. Then in Greek, she called:

"Paul Mattanos! Come back!"

She fastened her gaze upon the eyes of the Greek. The eyelids flickered; the lips parted.

"Open your eyes and listen to me, Paul Mattanos!"

The dark eyes opened, but there was no recognition in them.

"Did you kill Cora Brierly?"

A half-choked sound came to her ears. She listened.

"You did not kill her," she said. "Good! The fourteenth of November has passed and you have not managed to destroy each other. That enables me to destroy you both myself."

In the eyes upturned to hers there was glimmering fear.

"Sleep again, Paul Mattanos," said the old lady. Immediately the eyes closed.

Countess Xanti opened a small ivory case studded with pearls and gazed at the miniature it contained.

"Mary!" she whispered. With a withered finger she traced the outline of dark gray eyes and raven-black hair. From the miniature she looked again at the sleeper.

"You shall pay, Paul Mattanos!" she muttered. "You killed her for the promise of sixty thousand pounds. You shall know sixty thousand separate tortures before you die."

Mrs. Winchester's Spook Palace

that room. In silence they bowed to a silent and black-veiled figure standing beside the open safe. The figure counted the pieces as they went in, just as before the meal she had counted them go out.

Neither these nor any other servant except the butler, who waited on the table, was permitted to see the face of the mistress. Once, without her veil, Mrs. Winchester met two servants in a corridor. They were about their proper business, and the fault, if any, was hers, but she discharged them, with a whole year's pay in their pockets.

Though Mrs. Winchester shunned the eye of the camera even more than human ones, and she left no pictures, it is said that she closely resembled Queen Victoria. One day newspaper photographers managed to get onto the premises at one of the rare moments when the widow was out of the house. In terror she shut herself in a hothouse until she nearly suffocated. After that guards were hired to patrol the grounds and a pack of dogs could be heard howling at night.

Whatever success Mrs. Winchester may or may not have had with her ghosts, she managed to make her home burglarproof. Every thief on the Pacific slope had heard of those six safes full of valuables, yet never was one of them robbed. The reason is that no burglar will enter a house unless he has a good idea of the location of every window and door. A poor burglar would go crazy trying to find his way about that ghost house in the dark.

In spite of the mild climate, the wandering structure was as thoroughly heated as it was lighted. In the cellar one keeps encountering hot air, hot water and steam furnaces and the rooms above are equipped with gas and electric heaters, in addition to the fifty fireplaces. In one location, only ten feet by twenty-eight, there are eight complete and separate heating systems. Why did she take such arctic precaution in California? The only reason is that the spirits wanted them, just as they wanted all the silks and satins, the yacht she owned but never sailed in, and various other houses she bought, but never even went to look at.

Dining in solitary grandeur with her secretary, Mrs. Winchester used to enjoy a sip of rare wines and liqueurs from a cellar in keeping with everything else. One day the old lady went there herself to select a cobweb-covered vintage and came flying up the steps shrieking. She had seen on the cellar wall the black imprint of a hand. It was useless to tell her that it had been there for years and had been left by one of the original workmen. The spirits told her that it was a demon's hand and a warning against alcohol. She not only locked the cellar, but walled up the door and so thoroughly buried and hid it all under the walls of later structures that to this day that liquid treasure has never been located.

Until the widow's death every room was finished and furnished regardless of expense. Mahogany, rosewood and ebony, rubbed down to piano finish, seem to have been the taste of the spirits. The double front door of colored glass is valued at $2,000. Every window pane was of French bevelled plate glass set in German silver leading. Some windows of imported stained glass carried somewhat mystic inscriptions, including these: "Wide unclasp the table of our thoughts," and "These same thoughts people this little world."

The ballroom, designed for a hundred couples, had a floor laid by men brought from New York, who did it without using any nails, an innovation at that time. This room, to be sure, had a mirror over the mantel, but, until Sarah's death, the glass was kept back side to, that no spirit might see himself in it and be offended.

Once that ballroom came near being filled with living people. The spirits heard that "The Bostonians" were playing in San Francisco, and thought it would be nice for them to come out and play for them. Mrs. Winchester offered $3,000, but it couldn't be fitted into the schedule.

Sarah Winchester's bedroom, in which she slept and finally died, with carpenters' hammers ringing merrily, in spite of the promise of the spirits that nothing disagreeable would happen to her under such circumstances, has a marvellous floor. It is inlaid hardwood, without nails, and as you walk about the room the light plays tricks with the patterns, changing the light strips to dark and back again.

The floors of the servants' quarters are only a degree less fine, but were always covered with linoleum. It was sufficient that the spirits knew the perfection was there, though hidden from human eye. Doors are mostly mahogany, door knobs of copper and silver, hinges of bronze, silver and one in her bedroom of gold. At one corner of the ballroom is a beautiful little bar, where it is doubtful if any but spirits put their feet on the rail.

The wash tubs are of imported porcelain, with scrubbing boards built in. Her secretary's suite and that of her nurse, when she finally had to have one, were worthy of a princess. Their bathroom doors are of silvered mahogany, the wash bowls of inlaid mosaics, their chandeliers of cut glass, their mantels made of Japanese tile and hand picked bamboo, built by imported Oriental craftsmen. As the house stands today there is $5,000,000 in work and materials in sight, but no estimate can be made of the beautiful and expensive work that was torn out because it did not quite suit the spirits.

Finally, death found the strange old heiress in that splendid bedroom in spite of the hammers, and she had a chance to take up her grievances with the spirits on their own plane. It was then found that out of the $20,000,000 her husband had left and all her huge income, their remained a little more than $4,000,000, which will go mostly to the General Hospital at New Haven, Conn. She spent the rest on non-alcoholic spirits against which there is no prohibition.

Beef Croquettes.

MIX 2 cups chopped cold cooked beef, ½ teaspoon salt, a few grains pepper, a few drops onion juice, 1 egg yolk and 1 cup thick white sauce. Chill, shape in small croquettes, roll in crumbs, dip in slightly-beaten egg and again roll in crumbs. Fry in hot deep fat until delicately browned. Drain on unglazed paper. Serve hot with brown or tomato sauce.

Strawberry Trifle.

SOAK 1 tablespoon gelatine in 4 tablespoons cold water. Add 6 tablespoons boiling water and 1¼ cups sugar. Stir until dissolved and add 2 tablespoons lemon juice and 1¼ cups strained strawberry juice and pulp. When mixture begins to congeal, beat in 2 stiffly-beaten egg whites. Beat until almost stiff. Turn into a mold, chill, unmold and garnish with whipped cream and choice berries.

A great medical authority devised the formula of Pebeco. A special salt gives it its invigorating tang.

Its salty tang tells you

TASTE a little Pebeco. Instantly you get a sharp, clean, slightly salty tang. Crunch a little between your teeth—you detect its fine soft crystals rapidly dissolving in healthful fluids. That salty tang tells you the whole story of what Pebeco does for your teeth.

At once, it summons the natural fluids of the mouth, which should bathe the mouth day and night and protect against decay.

Day and night Pebeco keeps the mouth fluids at work cleansing in between your teeth and way back in your mouth beyond the reach of your tooth brush.

All day long the fresh feeling in your mouth tells you you are keeping it Young, Healthy, Lovely.

Made by Pebeco, Inc., a division of Lehn & Fink Products Company. Sole distributors, Lehn & Fink, Inc., Bloomfield, New Jersey. Distributed in Canada by Lehn & Fink (Canada) Limited.

Keeps the mouth YOUNG!

A letter from Mrs. A. J. La Ban of San Francisco

Dear Sirs:

Want to know why I like Pebeco?

I like Pebeco for many reasons, but the first and foremost of these reasons is because it isn't sweet. Not that I don't like sweets, I adore them! But to me it is just as incongruous to fill a tooth paste with sugar as it would be to put sugar in soup, or on meat or fish.

For years, I used to ask the druggist: "Haven't you a tooth paste that is not sweet?" and he would recommend this or that paste which would prove more or less mild or sharp, but always sweet.

Then, one day, tucked down in a little inconspicuous corner of your ad, in smallest print, I saw, "Its salty taste . . . " and I at once hied me to the drug store and bought a tube of Pebeco—I'm your customer for life.

Yours truly,
(Signed) MRS. A. J. LA BAN

Eggs in Your Easter Entertaining

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

EASTER not only terminates the forty days of the Lenten season, but is the beginning of a new period of warmth, life and beauty. Socially it is now fashionable to entertain with an Easter Monday breakfast or luncheon held at high noon, following Easter Sunday. Even the informal home meals should be given special Easter touches with the aid of eggs, distinctive breads and special menus.

The Easter table may be carried out in a color plan of purple with white or silver, or yellow, or in an assortment of typical Spring shades of pale colors. The centerpiece may be Easter lilies with white or purple narrow satin streamers ending in a silver novelty favor at each place, or a small bunch of violets. If the yellow color plan is preferred, either daffodils or tulips make a charming centre bouquet, and the favor may be novelty eggs containing small gifts, tiny chicks or a potted flower. Pussy willow and daffodils are even more graceful.

If the yellow plan is chosen the entire menu may be developed in predominantly yellow foods such as orange cup, egg salad, a yellow punch, cheese balls or a main cheese dish such as a souffle. Indeed, yellow is the most perfect color to use for a decorative plan in both foods and favors.

An attractive menu for the Easter Monday luncheon is the following:

Crab Meat Cocktail
Broiled Sweetbreads
Orange Sauce
Peas Glazed Potato Balls
Egg Salad in Lettuce Nests
Cheese Carrots
Strawberry Parfait
Easter Cake Coffee

Such a menu is a "sit down" affair, and may be served with as elaborate linens, crystal and silver, as the hostess desires. Carried out on a service of white crystal or glassware, with the dignity of silver candles, and a violet and pussy-willow centrepiece, it would appeal to the eye as much as to the taste.

There are many ways of making egg salads. To serve individually, use hard eggs, slice lengthwise, remove yolk, mash and combine with snappy flavors. Arrange in "nest" of shredded lettuce, celery, or cress. Pour over French dressing and "speckle" with paprika, black pepper, etc. The eggs may be tinted with beet juice and other vegetable colors. Take soft yellow cheese and shape into small carrots or potatoes; use tiny spray of parsley for carrot leaves, and roll potatoes in paprika. Serve these and other novelty vegetables as salad accessories with the egg.

A clever hostess served her Easter salad in a quaint Russian wooden bowl shaped like a large rooster. She filled the central space with chopped lettuce, arranged whole stuffed eggs in the centre, garnishing with sections of beet, carrot, etc., and serving with a distinctive dressing.

Many dishes lend themselves to retaining the form of the egg. Thus, one may use hard eggs and slice a narrow section from the blunt end. Set each egg upright on a toasted bread circle, arrange on attractive platter, and pour around a snappy cheese-tomato sauce. Eggs poached carefully, in a special egg poacher which releases each egg in perfect form, can be served on well-drained spinach with slices of broiled ham, broiled tongue, etc. Eggs in ramkins are attractive individual portions and are easily made by slipping the raw egg into a greased ramkin half full of a well-seasoned minced ham and crum mixture. A few moments baking of the cheese crums on top, makes this a different egg dish. For the first course, as appetizer, eggs may be used in half, or in fancy shape, garnished with anchovy, beet, pimento, etc.

In other countries, Easter seems to have originated unusual breads. Thus in Russia, Easter feasts are associated with Kolcech, or a large cake of the sponge type invariably decked with an immense paper rose; a trip to an Italian bakery discloses the type of bread known as Brioche, baked in rabbit and other holiday forms, even including that of the cross. From England, we get the Hot Cross Bun so common during Easter week. Children would certainly be delighted at a large bread baked in rabbit shape, holding in its paws, and at its tail, a brightly colored hard Easter egg.

The home Easter breakfast is frequently taken nearer noon. It may therefore have a substantial character as follows:

Grapefruit and Pineapple Cup
Broiled Ham
Egg in Spinach Nests
Brioche Bread with Hard Eggs or Hot Cross Buns
Conserves Coffee

Hot Cross Buns: Use standard soft raised dough mixture, such as for Parker House rolls. To this add 2 beaten egg yolks, 4 tablespoons sugar, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, ¼ cup currants, ¼ cup seeded raisins. Beat and knead well. Place in greased bowl and double in bulk. Shape in small buns, place on greased pan 2 inches apart and let rise double in bulk. Glaze with egg white diluted with 1 tablespoon water. Make cross on top of each bun. Bake in hot oven (355 degrees F.) for 25 minutes. While hot, fill cross with frosting.

Easter Cake: Use any sponge mixture and bake in tube pan. Have finely-shredded almonds, green tinted frosting, one large candy egg, and six to eight small eggs of assorted colors. Remove small portion from centre of cake. Spread cake with icing, lightly, then sprinkle on the almonds. Lay large egg in centre. Make small twigs with green icing and lay colored eggs at intervals. For children, use small candy rabbits or make rabbits of marshmallows.

New Method of Feeding Through the Skin

YOU may now give your stomach and throat a long rest without losing strength if the new method of feeding through the skin which has been perfected by Dr. Stejskal, of Vienna, gives the remarkable results he claims for his discovery.

A man can be adequately nourished through his skin, declared Dr. Stejskal, at a meeting of the Society of Diseases and Metabolism in Vienna, as reported in the "Neues Wiener Journal."

Dr. Stejskal claims to have succeeded in nourishing a large number of patients through the skin, after making experiments extending over a year.

Artificial feeding of two kinds is frequently practised—injections into the blood and injections into the digestive tract, but neither is satisfactory, it is claimed. Food thus given is not completely absorbed, and only simple elements, such as sugar or salt solution, can be infused into the blood. Such partial feeding, even when taken by way of the mouth, is harmful, for it disturbs the balance of nutrition, which requires a mixed diet.

It is a generally accepted fact that some fats can be absorbed through the skin, but Dr. Stejskal has compounded a mixture of fat, proteid, sugar and the necessary vitamins in a concentrated form. This concentrated food is to be massaged into the skin.

The importance of this discovery can hardly be over-estimated. Disturbances of the digestive tract, throat and mouth wounds, and cases of convalescence when extra feeding is called for without the disadvantages of tiring the patient, will no longer baffle the doctors' powers. The digestive organs can be rested for long periods while the patient keeps up his strength and body heat by the nourishment absorbed through his skin.

"It's so easy to soak the clothes in good, thick Rinso suds and have them come out of the washer so clean and stainless, that there's no rubbing to do. I never saw clothes come so white—why, you don't even have to boil. The Rinso way is fine on hands—keeps them out of hot water. And it's easy on my clothes, too—there's so little rubbing.

"Rinso goes so much farther than chips or puffed soap that I always use it for the dishes and for cleaning sinks, tiles, floors, painted woodwork, etc."

Easy Recipes That Are "Different"

By Mary Lee Swann,
The Well-Known Writer and Lecturer on Cooking.

Cottage Pudding.

CREAM ¼ cup butter, add ⅔ cup sugar gradually and 1 well-beaten egg. Mix and sift 2¼ cups flour, 4 teaspoons baking powder and 1 teaspoon salt. Add alternately with 1 cup milk to first mixture. Mix well, turn into a buttered Turk's-head pan. Bake in a moderate oven. Turn out on large platter, fill centre with sweetened stewed berries or fresh fruit.

Caramel Brown Betty.

BUTTER a baking dish. Have ready 3 cups chopped sour apples and 3 cups soft bread crumbs. In it arrange alternate layers of finely-chopped sour apples and bread crumbs, sprinkling each layer with cinnamon or cloves and brown sugar. Cover with crumbs, dot with butter and sprinkle with spices and sugar. Put on cover and bake in a hot oven 45 minutes. Uncover and brown. Serve warm with lemon sauce.

Luncheon Veal.

CUT 1½ pounds veal steak in pieces about 2 inches square. Roll in flour and sprinkle with salt. Brown in salt pork fat with a slice of onion. Remove and discard onion. Add 1½ cups hot water to veal, cover and cook 1 hour in a slow oven. When cool chop veal, season to taste with pepper and mix with the liquid in which it was cooked. Arrange in individual baking dishes. With pastry bag and rose tube press a little mold of well-seasoned mashed potato in centre of each serving. Brown delicately in a hot oven.

Toasted Chicken Sandwiches.

CUT bread in ¼-inch slices. Spread lightly with creamed butter and then arrange thinly-sliced chicken between slices of bread. Sprinkle sparingly with celery salt. Toast until delicately browned on both sides.

Hot Salmon Sandwiches.

BUTTER as many slices of bread as will be needed. Spread buttered bread with minced canned salmon seasoned with prepared mustard, salt and pepper. Toast on both sides until delicately browned.

Economy Whipped Cream.

COOK 1 cup evaporated milk in top of double boiled 20 minutes. Chill and add 1 stiffly-beaten egg white, sifted powdered sugar to taste and a few drops flavoring. Mix well and serve immediately.

Marshmallow Nut Gingerbread.

MIX and sift 2 cups flour, 1½ teaspoons soda, 1 teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon ginger. Beat 1 egg and add 1 cup molasses, ½ cup sour milk and ¼ cup melted shortening. Beat into dry ingredients. Add ⅔ cup broken nut meats. Pour into buttered and floured pans and bake in a moderate oven about ½ hour. Turn out on wire cooler. Cover one layer while hot with quartered marshmallows. Put other layer on marshmallows. Serve with whipped cream.

Pineapple Sauce.

BOIL 1 cup sugar and ½ cup water until of consistency of syrup. Add ½ cup shredded pineapple and serve hot.

Lemon Sauce.

MIX 3 tablespoons cornstarch with 1 cup sugar. Stir slowly into 2 cups boiling water. Cook 10 minutes, stirring constantly to prevent lumping. Add the grated rind and juice of one lemon or orange and 2 tablespoons butter. Serve hot.

Oatmeal Cookies.

BEAT 1 egg until light, add ½ cup sugar gradually, and then beat in ⅔ tablespoon melted butter, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ cup rolled oats and ⅛ teaspoon almond and ⅛ teaspoon vanilla. Drop by teaspoon on greased baking sheet about two inches apart. Bake in a moderate oven until delicately browned.

Delicious Cake.

CREAM 1 cup butter, add 2 cups sugar gradually. Sift in 3¼ cups flour sifted two or three times with ½ teaspoon salt and 2 teaspoons baking powder. Beat well, add ¼ teaspoon vanilla and ¼ teaspoon almond flavoring and fold in 6 stiffly-beaten egg whites. Bake in two large square layer cake pans in a moderate oven. Turn out on a wire cooler. When cold spread the first layer with marshmallow icing mixed with 6 or 8 chopped preserved chestnuts. Place other layer over this and cover with coffee icing. When coffee icing is firm melt unsweetened chocolate and with tip of spoon decorate cake with curved lines or curls of chocolate.

A Swiss Scientist's Unique Discovery

Thousands of American Doctors and Scores of Public Schools Are Using

That's Working Wonders for Underweight Children

By T. J. WILD, Ph. C., London

Mothers: Accept 3-day test of this utterly unique food-drink to try

SCIENTISTS working in Switzerland, the nation from which the world's probably most important discoveries in child welfare have emanated, have made important new discoveries. Discoveries which, throughout Europe and America, are largely establishing new theories in child building.

Underweight children are being built up at the rate of 8 ounces to 1½ pounds weekly! Nervousness, lassitude, lack of energy and appetite often are corrected in the space of days. In the opinion of world respected scientists, based on thousands of tests made, it marks a great advancement in child health.

It largely obviates the use of medicines. It ends "food-stuffing." Thousands of American doctors are employing it. Scores of public schools have adopted it. To obtain a three-day test, use coupon below.

Not a Medicine

It is called Ovaltine. Not a medicine, but a supremely enticing food-drink. A food-drink which is different in formula, action and effect from any other food-drink known.

A food-drink not to be compared with "Chocolate" or "Malt" preparations which may look or taste like Ovaltine.

How It Acts

Ovaltine acts. First, to supply highly concentrated food value minus the bulk of many so-called "nourishing" foods. One cup has the caloric value of 12 cups of beef extract! Added to milk, it almost doubles the food value of the milk. Consider what this means.

Second, it turns very quickly into energy, even where digestion is impaired. Thus pick-up in weight and strength is quick and remarkable. It digests where virtually no other food will. Third, and above all things, Ovaltine has the remarkable power of digesting and converting starches from other foods eaten into weight and energy.

"My Little Girl Gained 4 Pounds in 4 Weeks"

"I was afraid to try Ovaltine . . . . She loved the drink at once—and the change was almost magical—it proved 4 pounds in 4 weeks, shows better and looks and acts like a different child." Mrs. R. E. F. (Name on request.)

Over 50% of the normal diet of a child consists of starchy foods. Of cereals, bread, potatoes, vegetables, etc. Most under-par, underweight conditions, it has been discovered, are largely due to the child's failure to digest starches.

Now in Ovaltine science has met that situation. Starches heretofore often lost by many children, now are utilized. This marks one of the most far-reaching discoveries in child development. Hence it is not difficult to understand that the improvement in children is speedy and remarkable.

Druggists and grocers sell Ovaltine in 4 sizes for home use. But to let you try it we will send a 3-day introductory package for 10c to cover cost of packing and mailing. Just send in coupon with 10c.

Mail for 3-Day Supply

You give Ovaltine hot or cold, as a drink with or between meals, for extra energy. You give hot at bed time. For thus natural sleep is invited. Results will be a revelation. Accept, for your child's sake, the test offered here. Clip the coupon before you forget.

How Far Do You Walk in a Day?

NOT all long distance hikers are aprinting along the public highways. The housewife picking up toys and wielding the dustcloth, the policeman pacing his beat and the letter carrier on his daily route are not so spectacular, but they accumulate records of their own that are astonishing in the aggregate.

An enterprising investigator for the Boston Traveler found that a housekeeper walks every year a distance equal to that from Boston to San Francisco. Perhaps the tired business man has a right to his title when it is considered that every three or four weeks he walks farther than from Boston to New York, exclusive of the walking he does outside his office.

An average calculated from the daily walking mileage of a diverse group of persons including salesmen, dancers, waiters, children at play, conductors, policemen, letter carriers, salesgirls and stenographers amounted to the surprising figure of 18,098 steps, or 7⅞ miles.

A doctor in a hospital walked 18 miles a day—and he used his car when he was outdoors. A salesgirl walked 8 miles in a day. A shopper in Boston walked 11 miles in the stores during the Christmas season, though the average shopper in normal times makes only 8⅛ miles.

The steward in a grill steps lively throughout the day, for his pedometer at night showed 12½ miles. Even a store manager who probably felt chained to his desk walked 6¼ miles in a day.

If golf is principally valuable for making otherwise indolent gentlemen walk, it is effective, for in playing eighteen holes the golfer walks 8½ miles.

The average school girl hikes 11½ miles in a day about her work and play, while her more active brother usually tops her record by about four miles. A train conductor walked seven miles picking up tickets between Boston and Cleveland but the total was only five miles between Boston and Chicago.

The figures sound even more impressive when piled up by the week. A salesman covered 75 miles in his weekly rounds. A girl in a business office made 57 and a stenographer who rode to and from work still walked 43 miles in the course of a week.

Dancers work in a small area, but their mileage mounts rapidly. One registered a mile an act in vaudeville. A chorus girl registered 4½ miles a day and another dancer used up 5¼ miles between 8 o'clock and midnight.

INDICTED!

The menu is charged with being responsible for a high percentage of ill health due to a definite lack of bulk food.

DOCTORS agree that constipation, frequently caused by lack of bulk in diet, is one of the underlying causes of ill health.

Many persons could escape constipation entirely if they would eat more bulk food regularly.

Millions of people enjoy healthful regularity by eating Post's Bran Flakes every morning for breakfast. This delicious, nut-brown cereal appeals to their appetites and at the same time provides bulk that helps to banish constipation.

Make this two weeks' test

Constipation must not be neglected!* Start our two weeks' test now. Mail the coupon for a free sample which will show how delicious this food is. Or, better still, order a package from your grocer.

Start the test by eating a dish of Post's Bran Flakes for breakfast, with milk or cream, and eat it every day for two weeks. Vary it, if you like, with fresh or preserved fruits. It also makes delicious muffins and bran bread.

We predict after the two weeks' test you will find that Post's Bran Flakes has acted as a natural regulator, and you will notice a difference in how you feel.

Then follow the example of millions of healthy people who eat it every morning.

 Ordinary cases of constipation, brought about by too little bulk in the diet, should yield to Post's Bran Flakes. If your case is abnormal, consult a competent physician at once and follow his advice.*
